Princess to be dumped for 1981

Second sailing ends July 30

By AL FORREST

The Victoria Princess ferry will revert to one sailing a day from Seattle effective July 30 and almost certainly won't be back next year, Ald. Bob Wright said today.

He emerged from a meeting of the B.C. Steamship Co. board of directors to announce he has been asked to provide recommendations for an alternative to the ferry for next season.

The Victoria Princess will go on the Prince Rupert-Queen Charlottes run in October.

Wright said he would consider eight options before making his recommendation.

He said it was premature to discuss the nature of the options.

On Tuesday, Highways Minister Alex Fraser said the government might refit the Princess Marguerite and restore her for the 1981 season.

Wright said technical studies would have to be carried out before any decision is made.

Meanwhile, effective July 30 the Victoria Princess ferry will leave Seattle at 7:30 a.m. and leave Victoria at 6 p.m., making only one round trip daily.

Wright said the ferry would have reverted to this schedule on Labor Day and the change takes place one month early.

"We will still have a carrying capacity of about 1,600 passengers daily, including the three trips of the jetfoil."

(By comparison, the Marguerite carried 1,800 plus about 40 vehicles. Neither the jetfoil nor the ferry carry cars).

Wright said today's decision was the only responsible course of action in view of low traffic counts.

He said the two round trips of the Victoria Princess had given Victoria a capacity of about 2,450 daily, up 60 per cent from last year.

This increase was based on the early indications of a banner season but a slump began in mid-May, after the eruption of Mount St. Helens.

The revised capacity of 1,600 should be about right for the present demand.

He said he will complete his technical studies of various options for next year by mid-August so BCSC can get an early start in planning for next year.

Earlier today, Victoria MLA Charles Barber said Fraser's hints about the return of the Marguerite would result in a renewal of Maggie fever.

He said Fraser must have been doing more than floating a trial balloon when he hinted the Marguerite might be refitted for the 1981 season.

"He must be serious about it because it would be dangerous to raise hopes on this — there is too much emotion involved," Barber said.

"I'd be delighted to see the Marguerite. If Mr. Fraser will put her back in service I promise not to say: I told you so. At least not very loudly."

On Tuesday Fraser blamed the unpopularity of Maggie's replacement, the Victoria Princess, as a factor in the 35-per-cent decline in Seattle-Victoria travel in June.

He said the Marguerite might be brought back for 1981 or the government might obtain the CP Rail ferry, the Princess of Vancouver, which runs between Nanaimo and Vancouver. She is similar to the Marguerite and has been certified seaworthy until 1982.

Ottawa, province parley faltering

TORONTO (CP) — Federal and provincial negotiators reached no consensus Tuesday night in a last-ditch effort to find a speedy solution to two major stumbling blocks hampering their constitutional talks.

The two issues discussed by federal and provincial ministers during the special evening session were which level of government should have the main control over off-shore resources and what should be the extent of federal trade and commerce powers.

A third issue — Senate reform — also discussed Tuesday was not considered a major problem.

The ministers did agree to send the off-shore resources question to a committee of junior officials for further study.

However, Roy Romanow, Saskatchewan attorney-general and co-chairman of the talks said today in an interview one should not "attach all that much importance" to that decision.

Jean Chretien, federal justice minister and the other co-chairman, complained to reporters that Romanow and many other provincial delegates do not believe in "my vision of Canada."

Many provincial governments believe Canada can operate as 10 separate economic units and that the federal government should not have the power to intervene when the flow of goods, capital and labor is disrupted across provincial boundaries, Chretien said.

There already are more trade barriers in Canada than in the European Economic Community, he said.

Quebec and Newfoundland already have legislation discouraging the hiring of residents from other provinces in specific industries, a point Prime Minister Trudeau frequently raises.

Romanow said Tuesday the province's are "very, very nervous" about the federal desire to step in and override provincial legislation establishing trade barriers.

Miami blacks battle with police

MIAMI (AP) — Gangs of black youths roamed the streets of Liberty City today after five white policemen were shot and wounded and 500 officers in riot gear cordoned off a 14-square-kilometre area of northwestern Miami.

More than 25 people were reported injured during a night of rock- and bottle-throwing, sporadic looting, arson, firebombing and sniper fire.

Seven people had been arrested by early today.

The night-long violence by hundreds of youths was triggered Tuesday by a plainclothes officer's attempt to stop two black youths from robbing a white motorist in the same neighborhood devastated by race riots two months ago, officials said.

A smaller area in Coconut Grove in southwestern Miami also was sealed off by police carrying shotguns and automatic weapons.

"Hell, man, we're fighting back," one black teenager said.

"Blacks have to stand up, man," said 17-year-old Jerry Pounder. "The way they (the police) handle things is all wrong. It's just a disgrace. They come in here bluffing somebody down."

Firefighters battled three fires, including one at a gasoline service station.

"We've had numerous sniping incidents reported throughout the night," said Jim Bigler, Dade County Central District officer. "But for the most part, we've been trying to stay out of the area and let things calm down. The tension (from the May 17 riots) has not eased. It is still acute."

Dade County Lieut. Robert Fortney said police reported more gunfire Tuesday than in the May riots, perhaps because of the looting of gunshops during the riots that left 18 people dead. Some of the victims were motorists caught in the bloody outpouring.

Terrified white drivers raced through Liberty City as bricks and rocks pelted their cars Tuesday. "I thought I wouldn't make it out alive," said Jose Fernandez, 26.

Police fired tear gas to disperse throngs of black youths. Several people, including a seven-month-old baby, were treated for gas inhalation.

The area was devastated by three days of rioting that broke out May 17 after an all-white jury acquitted four white former Dade policemen charged in the beating death of black Miami businessman Arthur McDuffie. The rioting, which included random, brutal attacks on whites, caused more than $100 million in damage.

Much of the violence Tuesday was aimed at police, who were not calling it a racial problem, said Sgt. Peter Cuccaro.

The violence erupted late in the afternoon after three officers on a stakeout broke up the robbery of a white motorist by a pair of black youths. Sgt. Fred Pelny, 39, and two policemen chased two suspects into a Liberty City housing project.

"They fought us," Pelny said. "They started hollering to the crowd and the crowd started coming and they started shooting at us."

Pelny was shot in the back as the officers retreated from a rock-throwing crowd.

Brewery dispute in limbo

While hotels and the public continue stockpiling beer, there still is little indication today whether a labor dispute will shut down the brewery industry.

Plant managers at three major breweries are in a legal position to lock out 1,500 employees but have not taken any action.

Union leaders are expected to complete a strike vote among their members but say they are not planning one immediately.

And both sides appear to be in no hurry to shut down plants.

Representatives for Labatt's, Molson and Carling O'Keefe, and the Brewery, Winery and Distillery Workers Union held 12 hours of talks which broke down Monday night. John Langley, union spokesman, said the union would reassess its position.

The union took the position in a news conference Tuesday that it did not need to complete a strike vote among its total membership because one had already been taken among the employees at Labatt's in Victoria.

Eric Harris, chief management negotiator, told a news conference the employers have told the union they are prepared to improve on their three-year offer Tuesday but the union didn't respond "so the ball is in their court."

Langley said the union is waiting for management to respond to its two-year contract proposal.

Reagan courting Ford as V-P running mate?

DETROIT (UPI) — Ronald Reagan today asked Republican congressional leaders to convince Gerald Ford to accept the vice-presidential nomination, sources said. (Earlier convention story on page 48).

Reagan met for 40 minutes with Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee and Rep. John Rhodes of Arizona and asked them "to convince him it's in the best interest of the country for him to accept second spot," the sources reported.

But Reagan denied he requested the Senate and House GOP leaders to intercede with Ford, who has rejected past overtures from the former California governor and his aides.

Two men close to Reagan, Rep. Tom Evans of Delaware and Michigan GOP chairman Melvin Larsen, said Reagan had narrowed his list of alternatives to three finalists — George Bush and Reps. Guy Vander Jagt of Michigan and Jack Kemp of New York.

Reagan and Ford met Tuesday but both denied the No. 2 spot on the GOP ticket was offered to the former president, who defeated Reagan in a bitter battle for the 1976 presidential nod.

The sources said Reagan told the congressional leaders he was prepared to offer Ford a "kind of co-president type thing" and asked them to put pressure on Ford.

"They are pulling out all the stops," the sources said "He (Ford) is still holding back, still saying no, but it's not to the point where the decision could not be reversed."

The sources said Baker and Rhodes, who had not met personally with Ford, were trying to get a private commitment from him to say yes if Reagan publicly asks him to be his running mate.

Ford said today he expects another meeting with Reagan before the presidential candidate makes his final choice.

But Ford again said he had not changed his mind about running for the job he held before Richard Nixon's resignation, citing both constitutional problems and his belief there is a better candidate.

Border sealing sows confusion

Times News Services

TEHRAN — Iran today announced that all outgoing air, sea and land traffic would be banned, but left airlines and other carriers in a state of confusion by a series of conflicting announcements.

The state radio first announced Tuesday night that there would be a one-week ban, which was immediately denied by the office of President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr. Then early this morning a spokesman confirmed that traffic would be stopped, but said the ban would only last for 48 hours.

An abortive coup attempt announced by the government last week was given by the radio as the reason for the border closure.

There are about 130 international flights leaving Tehran each week, meaning that probably more than 3,000 passengers will have to delay their departure plans.

Thousands of Iranians traditionally try to escape the country's searing summer heat by travelling — mainly to Europe.

The order will also affect oil tankers, which could cause some slight disruption in Iran's oil exports.

Meanwhile, the former shah of Iran underwent "limited surgery" today to clean a new abscess that had formed on his thigh, a Cairo doctor said.

Ruling by WCB stuns Alcan

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Aluminum Company of Canada is upset over a Worker's Compensation Board decision that could lead to compensation claims from hundreds of present and former workers at Alcan's Kitimat smelter.

The board has recognized fluorosis — a degenerative disease of the spine and joints — as an industrial disease, which means Kitimat smelter workers who fall victim to it will not have to prove the illness is related to the job.

Workers will qualify for treatment and pension if disabled and the onus will be on the company to prove the disability wasn't caused on the job.

Workers have been exposed to fluoride since the Kitimat smelter opened in 1954. Fluoride exposure has been a continuing issue at the Kitimat smelter.

The WCB decision in June was seen as a major victory by the Canadian Association of Smelter and Allied Workers. The union had funded a $100,000 study on fluoride and worker health at Alcan in 1978, environmental consultant Jim Brisebois said Tuesday.

Then a union official, Brisebois was instrumental in hiring researcher Dr. Betram Carnow, whose study concluded: "The men in the aluminum smelter are suffering from a crippling disease of the muscle and bone, and particularly of the lumbosacral and cervical spine."

WCB officials said Tuesday fluorosis shows up first in pelvic problems and spinal stiffness, conditions the company and board have until now said were caused by aging.

Carnow's findings now are being examined by University of B.C. researcher Dr. Stephan Gryzbowski, who is under contract to the WCB.

WCB officials said they did not know how many cases would be affected by the ruling because they're not yet in the board's computer relating to fluoride. After Carnow's report several claims were filed and some remain pending.

The WCB decision also affects a number of other industries, including brick and ceramic manufacturing, yeast fermentation processes and the glass blowing industry, board information officer Brenda Whittingham said.

New log price system urged

The provincial government's white paper on Crown timber prices has recommended establishing an end product appraisal system for coastal logging operations, similar to the system now in use in the interior.

An end product appraisal would end current practice on the coast of determining the stumpage rate for Crown timber through the Vancouver log market.

The market determines value of all coastal logs, even though only about 10-15 per cent of logs are traded through it.

Stumpage rate — the price paid by logging companies for Crown timber — is determined by the dollar value of usable wood in the tree before it is logged.

Forests Minister Tom Waterland said an end appraisal system on the coast, while more complex than the log market, would result in a more reliable product base and more realistic and equitable appraisals.

The white paper said that if an end appraisal system is agreed to it could be implemented by Jan. 1, 1983.

The paper also recommends the end appraisal system in the interior be maintained, rejecting as too inflexible rate schedules or royalties.

Seoul civil service purged

SEOUL (Reuter) — South Korea's military-backed government announced Tuesday the largest firing of civil servants in the country's history following major purges in military, political and other sectors in the recent months.

Government Administration Minister Kim Yong-Hyu said 4,760 officials from various ministries and other administration departments were fired for corruption and inefficiency as part of an official "purification" drive.

Last week, the Special Committee for National Security Measures said another 232 senior public officials from the executive, judiciary and legislative branches were dismissed on suspicion of corruption and other irregularities.

The special committee, a military-dominated advisory group serving President Choi Kyu-Hah and coordinating policies between South Korea's martial law authorities and the civilian cabinet, said the drive was necessary to safeguard the state, protect the right to survival of the people and ensure stability.

The 25 members of the committee, set up shortly after a week-long armed general uprising in the southern city of Kwangju in May, include the president, several cabinet ministers and the army strongman, Lt.-Gen. Chun Doo-Hwan.

Petroleum hike legality doubted

OTTAWA (CP) — Opposition Leader Joe Clark said Tuesday the Progressive Conservatives will seek an opinion on the legality of a half-cent-a-litre increase in gasoline and heating oil prices announced by the government last week.

He and Bill Jarvis, the Conservative energy critic, said the increase that became effective at midnight Friday night probably was illegal.

Clark told reporters that now the party knows the government will not ask for a legal opinion. "It's clear that we must, and we will."

He also left open the possibility of a class action lawsuit by the Conservatives if the increase, which will cost Canadians an extra $500 million a year, is found to be illegal.

The Conservative suggestion of illegality is based on highly technical grounds.

Conservative MPs said the levy does not fall into the category of a tax because the money collected under it goes into a special fund set up under the Petroleum Administration Act — not general government revenues.

Legislation is needed to increase the levy, the Conservatives said. Using a ways-and-means motion to increase a levy could render the action illegal.

Ways-and-means motions could be used only to bring in increases affecting such things as personal income tax or excise taxes.

Speaker Jeanne Sauve said Friday that House procedures were not violated but declined to rule on the legality of the levy.

Jarvis said outside the Commons he is not opposed to the government collecting the extra money.

"Simple arithmetic dictates they have to have that money. But if they have to have it, I'm very concerned they do it legally."

Festival too crowded?

VANCOUVER (CP) — A city alderman wants a special meeting of council to discuss the future of the city's annual summer sea festival, particularly in the crowded West End area where police and celebrants clashed violently last weekend.

Alderman Doug Little, who says he will propose the meeting to council next week, said Tuesday the West End already is crowded on pleasant summer evenings.

The sea festival, which winds up this weekend, has been relatively quiet and orderly since the incident.

YOU BE THE JUDGE!

1. Since the earliest history man has used the conventional fireplace in various forms to heat his home and cook his food.

As long as there were large quantities of fuel available and construction of homes were not very tight so that large amounts of air could be drawn into the house to fill the vacuum left by heat going up the chimney, this fireplace worked well but was highly inefficient at its' best.

With the advent of good tight construction practices, the conventional fireplaces refuses to work from lack of oxygen.

2. To improve the efficiency of the fireplace, man has installed various forms of steel units to circulate the heated air in the house. This increased the efficiency, but is subject to the same drawback as the conventional fireplace because of the amount of cold air that has to be sucked into the house to feed the fire.

The colder it is outside, the more inefficient the fireplace becomes.

3. Since air must be brought into the house to operate a fireplace, the simplest and most logical thing to do is to bring the air in heated. With the Fresh Air Fireplace system, cold air is piped directly from outside into the base of the unit, up around the sides, as it is heated through a heat exchanger and expelled into the home at temperatures from 100 degrees to 600 degrees fahrenheit.

By placing an electric fan on the infeed, the fireplace now becomes a forced air heating unit. By installing heat-tempered glass doors so the fire is completely controlled, the amount of fuel needed to heat a house is drastically reduced and the house is slightly presurised.

Why the mad rush for meaningless role?

DETROIT — It was James Vance Garner, a vice-president in a long-ago and more honest era, who offered the opinion that the No. 2 spot in the White House "wasn't worth a pitcher of warm spit."

Garner didn't really say spit, but reporters cleaned up the quote for him, the two substances being of roughly the same value.

The standard view is that the role of 'Veep' is still as useless. If so, why are all these grown men racing about here this week, crinkling their eyes, saying flattering things to people they have never met and generally acting like slavering sycophants who desperately need to get off the welfare roles and find a job?

In the Republicans' supposed presidential convention, where the candidate has already won the job and killed off a contest, the only suspense at all is who will be the running mate of Ronald Reagan — and therefore tug the ticket even further to the right, or help it lurch slightly to the left and the moderate voter.

All these handsome, well-groomed men with plenty of teeth and hair auditioning for the job are, in fact, respectable ghouls.

They know in their hearts that the Garner theory, in 1980, is wrong.

They know that the way tumultuous American politics at the top has been conducted for the past 20 years, the feckless Veep, in truth, has a pretty good chance of ending up in the catbird seat.

Not a single American president in two decades has been allowed to serve out his maximum allotted time.

John Kennedy was assassinated. Lyndon Johnson was forced from office by the youth of a nation incensed at the Vietnam farce. Richard Nixon escaped impeachment only by resigning. Gerald Ford was defeated before he was elected by anyone and now Jimmy Carter looks more and more like a one-term wonder.

They all came tumbling down

Little wonder, then that all these terribly earnest men with their incredibly boring speaking styles are paraded like entries in a beefcake contest before the TV cameras and the yawning, gossiping delegates who wander about the Joe Louis Arena searching for the location of the next cocktail party.

One by one they shook their bromides and their molars into the cameras and they all came tumbling down.

The locally-touted Senator, Richard Lugar from Indiana, billed as both an Eagle Scout and a Rhodes scholar, managed to produce only the scrubbed ambitious air of those two roles.

William Simon, the former secretary of the treasury, and much-loved by the right wing for his stern economic views, ranted and bored.

Donald Rumsfeld, a former secretary of defence who wants the job, sent delegates into a doze with another sincere recitation of the obvious.

Warner knows his priorities

Virginia's senator, John Warner, who looks like an aging Hugh Hefner and is better known as Mr. Elizabeth Taylor, worked "my wife and I" into his meeting with the press twice within the opening minutes, thereby revealing his priority of things.

The worst indictment of all these tigers is that the only senator who could shush the buzz of gossip on the floor was the reborn golfer, Gerald Ford, who hinted broadly that he could do the job if he wanted to.

Since Mr. Ford turned 67 on Monday, not even the masochistic Republican Party, which could do a Barry-Goldwater-suicide with an act too far right wing, seems inclined to reach into the geriatric ward for its new blood.

With the VP puzzle the only inponderable and the convention locked into the implacable Reagan platform, it's understandable that the Republicans are setting a world record for department store shopping.

The party has only 16 hours of live TV as opposed to the 60 hours the talkative Democrats will command next month in New York.

The only real subject here is the subjest no one really will discuss out loud — the ghoul factor.

When the man you are about to nominate for the most powerful post in the world is already 69, the back-up stands a very good chance (as happened with two of the past four presidents) of inheriting the job.

No wonder they can't relax before a microphone.

Ottawa to control Indians' millions

VANCOUVER (CP) — Ottawa will continue to control the purse strings for the Fort Nelson Indian band, even though the band is soon to enter into a gas-revenue sharing agreement which will bring it almost $100 million, a federal official says.

Under the Indian Act, the 300-member band will need permission from the Indian and Northern Affairs ministry to use a large part of the money.

"The money will be in their control, but it can only be used for certain things under the Indian Act," Peter Clark, director of land, membership and estates for the federal government, said Tuesday.

The band will have two accounts, Clark said. One will be a revenue account which it will be able to use at its own discretion. The other, and by far the largest, will be a capital account which can only be used with the permission of the ministry.

An immediate $17 million comes to the band under the agreement from royalties collected by the province from natural gas wells on the reserve since 1977. There is expected to be about $80 million more in similar revenues during the next 20 years.

The act allows the band to share up to 50 per cent of the revenues on a per capita basis, Clark said. But band members are expected to share only a small part of the original $17 million. Clark said the band leaders may give each member $20,000. The money alloted to young people will be put in trust.

The band has indicated some of the capital account money will be sought to upgrade water service and housing on the reserve, he said.

Meanwhile, Ottawa has backed down from its threat to cut funding for Indian bands who refuse to sign a new budget agreement.

The Indians had claimed the agreement would have reversed a trend to local control of their budgets, federal officials said Tuesday.

Under the now-shelved agreement, Indian affairs would have approved all local budgets, demanded a statement from bands every three months, and could have withheld money or taken over reserve administration in the case of disagreements.

Under the old rules, again in effect, funds are given to bands and band council which set budgets and send annual statements to Ottawa.

Bathtub beer swiped

NANAIMO (CP) — The theft of 660 dozen bottles of beer is not expected to have any serious effect on this weekend's annual bathtub race celebrations, says a spokesman for the Loyal Nanaimo Bathtub Society.

"At our emergency meeting Tuesday night, it was agreed that the beer we still have will meet every eventuality," said society commodore Bob Pedersen.

Service and sports clubs had laid in 2,550 dozen bottles of beer earlier this month to serve at events they are sponsoring as part of the weekend festivities.

Deer disaster to Charlottes

VANCOUVER (CP) — An exploding deer population on the Queen Charlotte Islands has brought ecological disaster to forests there, says a B.C. forest service scientist.

Jim Pojar of the research branch of the forests ministry in Smithers told an international convention of botanists here that the deer, unchecked by natural predators, have denuded the forest undergrowth natural to the region off the north B.C. coast.

New growth of western red cedar has been hit hardest, Pojar said. Yellow cedar, western hemlock and Sitka spruce have suffered as well in many areas.

Deer were introduced to the Queen Charlotte Islands in the early 1900s to provide sport for hunters, he said, but without wolves and cougars to keep their numbers down, they have multiplied out of control.

"I don't know what to do other than introduce something like wolves, but I would hesitate to do that," Pojar said.

He said where new trees manage to grow high enough to escape the hungry deer, they assume bizarre shapes, with their lower branches gnawed away close to the trunk and their upper ones spreading in a vigorously growing crown.

"The whole forest has sort of a devastated look to it," Pojar said.

21 persons drown

TOKYO (AP) — Twenty-one persons were drowned and 10 others were missing from Japan's crowded beaches during the weekend as high temperatures and humidity sent millions to the shore.

More trouble than it's worth

Finance Minister Hugh Curtis has announced a freeze on all civil service hiring in the hopes of shoring up the province's sagging finances so he can end the year with a balanced budget.

Mr. Curtis has said he hopes to save about $80 million by not replacing those civil servants who leave between now and the end of the fiscal year next March.

Assume that the average civil servant makes about $20,000 per year in wages and benefits. The average of those who leave the public service may even be a little lower, since turnover tends to be highest at the lowest end of the payscale. Only nine months remain in the fiscal year, so Mr. Curtis is going to save only about $15,000 for every civil servant who leaves.

To save the $80 million he predicted, some 5,300 civil servants would have to disappear from the payrolls — about one-eighth of the public service. That would be enough to affect service to the public, yet not enough to save the sums the government needs to balance the budget.

Already government sources are predicting a shortfall of about $435 million for the year — an unexpected payment of $135 million to nurses as a result of their contract settlement, plus a $300 million drop from predicted natural gas sales.

The $80 million saving Curtis is hoping for, even if achieved, would be less than 20 per cent of the shortfall. For the entire sum to be made up through civil service cuts would require the elimination of some 29,000 public servants.

Moreover, the government should recall what the former NDP government found when it tried to apply an across-the-board hiring freeze in 1975: it didn't work. The reason was the varying rates of turnover among various classifications of civil servants. Normally support personnel — secretaries and the like — leave the civil servants at a much higher rate than do managers, professionals and executives.

The NDP found the rigid freeze became unworkable after a few months when some divisions had, for example, nine remaining managers with no secretaries and support staff at all. The bureaucracy broke down entirely.

The idea of ensuring that no unnecessary civil servants are hired is a good one, but an across-the-board measure will cause more trouble than it's worth.

Still unusual justice

Attorney-General Allan Williams did find out what happened at the June 25 provincial court hearing in Queen Charlotte City, but he should not be satisfied with the answer.

Charlie Bellas, a commercial fisherman, launched a private action against a senior member of the B.C. forest service, an official of the federal fisheries department and a logging company. He alleged they violated the federal fisheries act by being party to a steep slope logging operation at Riley Creek on the Queen Charlottes last year.

At the hearing the crown counsel entered a stay of proceedings without giving Bellas or his lawyer prior notice or explaining why the stay was entered. The crown counsel said he was acting on instructions from the ministry and explanations weren't necessary.

The judge had no choice but to accept the stay. However, the manner in which the crown handled this private prosecution brought it to a very unusual and disquieting conclusion. It gave the appearance that the ministry could stop any private prosecution without explanation.

Attorney-General Allan Williams told the Times that he received a report which stated that the a stay of proceedings was entered because there was a statutory defence. Bellas' charges were laid under Section 31 (1) of the Fisheries Act which states no person shall carry on any work that results in the harmful alteration of fish habitat. Williams said the statutory defence lies in Section 31 (2) which states no person contravenes subsection 1 under any conditions authorized by the fisheries ministry.

Since the fisheries ministry had agreed, with the Forest Service, to allow logging to proceed, the attorney-general's department apparently saw no point in allowing Bellas' case to proceed.

Bellas' lawyer Garth Evans believes, and rightly so, that since it was a private action the case should have proceeded. "If the statutory defence applied, and I don't think it did, why didn't they let us go ahead and make fools of ourselves?" he said.

Aside from the lack of courtesy afforded Bellas, this case raises a larger issue. Using the statutory defence to stay the proceeding, the crown has refused Bellas and perhaps other individuals the right to use the courts to test whether federal and provincial agencies act with due diligence in allowing logging to proceed.

The courts, in allowing or disallowing the statutory defence, could have decided if the government agencies had acted appropriately: The fact that the attorney-general's department made the decision does not give the appearance that justice has been done.

CAROL GOAR

Swallowing his own bomb

OTTAWA — Gilles Lamontange swallowed, straightened his tie, then smiled weakly into the television camera.

It was probably the tensest moment in the defence minister's 15-year political career.

The 61-year-old former Quebec mayor had just been raked over the coals in the House of Commons for declaring in a weekend television interview that the only way to get the Russians to talk seriously about disarmament is "to find sophisticated weapons, like nuclear weapons."

This appeared strangely out of step with Canada's record as a strong promoter of nuclear disarmament and — more to the point — a contradiction of the prime minister's reputation as one of the world's most eloquent advocates of a scaling down of the arms race.

Trudeau insists the F-18A and all military hardware is non-nuclear.

Liberal hawk?

Now Lamontange was in the small television studio in the basement of the Parliament Buildings, sweating under the hot lights while a dozen or more journalists grilled him in both languages — some sensing a juicy crack in the Trudeau cabinet, others wondering if Lamontagne genuinely intended to be hawk of the Liberal administration.

The small room was stifling. Lamontage struggled to appear calm.

"Canada does not want to become a nuclear power," he began.

The country has no nuclear weapons and wants none, the defence minister assured everyone. He was merely advocating that the western powers collectively keep enough menacing military hardware on hand that the Russians feel no inclination to risk an international confrontation.

'If I could get rid of nuclear bombs and conventional bombs and every kind of bomb, I would be happy," he said. "But the only way to have real peace, to talk about disarmament, is to be strong ourselves."

Recalling his own years as a fighter pilot during the Second World War, Lamontagne said he'd seen enough bombs to last him a lifetime. But he remains convinced to this day that the Germans would never have attacked Poland in 1939 if the Allies had made it clear that they had the strength to stop Hitler and they weren't afraid to use it.

"Russia seems to be aggressive at the moment," he said. "When there are are two adversaries, the best way to live is with equal power."

Lamontange said he had rushed directly to the studio from the House of Commons, stopping briefly to consult the prime minister before he faced the cameras. He insisted that he detected no disapproval from Trudeau.

Nuclear testing

But those watching the prime minister closely during Lamontange's interrogation in the House could not help noticing how Trudeau twisted uneasily in his seat, as his defence minister boldly repeated what he said on the weekend: "I said that the only we could have a very efficient deterrent would be to have sophisticated weapons by which we could prove to the Russians, at the moment, that we mean seriously that we want to talk about peace and disarmament and that we will talk from strength, not from weakness."

From the moment he entered Parliament, Trudeau has never wavered in his opposition to the spread of deadly nuclear weapons. One of his first acts as prime minister in the early 1970s was to replace all nuclear weapons used by Canada's NATO contingent in Europe with conventional weapons.

He has insisted that the country's new fighter aircraft, the F-18, be equipped with non-nuclear weapons and he even went so far, during a recent tour of Europe, as to suggest that Canada would protest strongly if there was clear evidence that France is testing a nuclear bomb, as it has hinted it might do.

Trudeau stated unequivocally that Canada's opposition to nuclear weapons is as firm as ever. "It is not government policy to advocate any form of nuclear development of new armaments or further deployment of old armaments."

He refused to refute his minister's statement in public. But he promised to keep fighting for a non-nuclear world.

One of the key planks in his campaign will be to protest vigorously to the French government if that country began nuclear testing. The only thing stopping him at the moment, Trudeau explained, is that he is not sure how much of France's nuclear program is real and how much is mere boasting.

Conservative defence critic Allan McKinnon told reporters after Question Period he was convinced that Lamontagne has little support either in the Liberal cabinet or in the House of Commons.

Lamontange, sweating under the hot television lights, shrugged off such speculation. But he could not shrug off the uneasy look in his eye or the desperate note in his voice.

In the image of Jane Fonda?

OTTAWA — To put the question involved risks. Such as that of getting stomped on. But that's a hazard of the trade of investigative journalism. Also, the incongruity was too blatant to be ignored.

There was Iona Campagnolo talking about refugee camps so overcrowded that in one hut a baby got scorched by being backed against a stove, and about having a viper cross her path, and about how you collect flies, and about Communist artillery going "whomp, whomp, whomp", along the border eight miles away.

And there was, well, Iona Campagnolo. Ex-Sports Minister. Liberal leadership candidate last December, had Pierre Trudeau not come back. Our Margaret Thatcher, but dishy. Peaches and cream complexion; the plume of silver hair that is her trade mark; silver bracelet; lace blouse; fleck-free black suit. Not so much impeccable as admantine.

Sense to wait

So that my peers wouldn't watch me getting stomped on, I had sense enough at least to wait until the formal press conference was over and Campagnolo was moving about the room, gliding about would be a better term, to allow reporters who'd suddenly thought of questions they ought to have asked earlier, to do so.

We talked about the Cambodian refugee camp in Thailand whose cause she has made her own, and where she has just spent two weeks on behalf of the Canadian University Service Overseas (CUSO). It's called Kab Cherng, or "Slashed Feet" translated literally, and meaning that its 10,000 inhabitants will allow no grass to grow beneath their feet until they go home.

Then I asked, er, um, well, wasn't she doing a Jane Fonda number, a lady beautiful being bountiful?

Her lips pursed into a small move. Her chin lifted a centimetre.

"You don't think I looked like this over there do you? I was dressed like everyone else, jeans, shirt, northern boots. And I sweated a lot."

But, er, um, wasn't this causiness, well, sudden?

"You forget that I grew up in a Third World country — northern British Columbia. That's what got me into politics. We had nothing; the south had everything, and my only interest in politics was to change that."

A feature of Canadian politics is that ex-ministers go, abruptly, from having everything to having nothing. Of the 13 Liberal ministers defeated in May, 1979, only Otto Lang got the kind of job you'd expect an ex-minister go get, as a vice-president of Pioneer Grain in Winnipeg.

Like the rest, Campagnolo found herself with time on her hands. Back in Vancouver now, she does 26 TV shows a year, which buys the bacon but doesn't provide her with enough of a challenge to chew on.

Last February, a Toronto Star reporter, in one of those what's-it-like-when-the-telephone-stops-ringing interviews, asked Campagnolo what she was going to do with herself now that she had sat out the federal election. She would like to do something international, something or other to do with foreign aid, she said.

A CUSO official spotted the news item, and put to Campagnolo the proposition that maybe she would like to get some money where she had put her mouth. Kab Cherng, which will be run exclusively by CUSO, and which, uniquely among the international agencies there, will do this by using the Thais themselves rather than importing outside experts, will need $400,000 in private Canadian donations to operate for the next six months.

So out went Campagnolo, in jeans and shirt and northern boots, to sweat a lot, to get soaked (it was the monsoon), to hear the artillery fire, to learn how you catch flies when you can't afford chemicals to put them down (you pay children 25 cents for each kilo's worth they catch, and then mix up the flies with rice as a high protein diet for chickens) and to get totally turned on.

Moved by stoicism

The best part, she says, was being moved by the stoicism of the refugees and by the idealism of the people she met, like the three Dutch-Canadians working on water dike projects up in the barren country of north-eastern Thailand, or the retired Canadian executive, Graham Taylor, who in the same region has started a new cottage industry of knitting sweaters, which he sells to Hudson's Bay.

The worst part was the culture shock. "Not there: I felt at home. But back here, where everyone is so smug and self-satisfied and self-centred."

Though Campagnolo says she is finished with politics, it is hard to believe her. Two thoughts in the meantime. Unlike most of her ex-colleagues, she has found herself a post-politics cause. Also, if we don't cough up the $400,000 she wants, and CUSO needs, we deserve to get stomped on.

Sitting in cesspool

I write in reference to a piece by Al Forrest in the July 7 Times. He spoke of the need to develop facilities on the island to attract longer-term visitors, along with the line of resort hotels on or near the waterfront.

As a native Victorian returning to the city after several years absence, I must say the state of the waterfronts is deplorable. On many beaches, even at lakesides, are signs warning of water pollution and health hazards. Another article in the same paper told of hepatitis cases in Cordova Bay likely caused by raw sewage seepage into open ditches, and lying in pools on the beaches. How on earth can Victoria expect to attract people to "super-natural" B.C. when she's sitting in an ever-worsening cesspool?

There's an old saying about the wisdom in not dirtying one's own nest that doesn't seem to have sunk in here. The oceans may be big, but they aren't infinite. Adequate sewage-treatment facilities take time to be developed and put in operation, and being as there's always a larger population contributing to the problem, how long can Victoria afford to wait before beginning?

Victoria is too pretty a city to drown in its own waste. — J. M. Edwards, 1035 Oliphant Street.

Pottery towns

On page 44 of the June 14 edition of the Victoria Times, you published an article under the heading "Wedgwood United Art, Industry".

In this article there is a glaring error which deserves correction, and I quote: "As a result, Josiah prospered sufficiently to buy an estate between Hoinley and Newcastle-under-Lyme — two of the six pottery towns — in 1766, where he built a new model factory he named Etruria, and a large house for himself, Etruria Hall".

Newcastle-under-Lyme is not, nor ever has been "one of the six pottery towns". It is a separate "loyal and ancient borough" whose charter dates back to 1100 A.D. under John of Gaunt and it existed long before Stoke-on-Trent existed. The original six towns which were amalgamated to form the present city of Stoke-on-Trent were Longton, Fenton (the town Arnold Bennett forgot), Stoke, Hamley, Burslem and Tunstall. There have been many unsuccessful attempts by Stoke-on-Trent to annex Newcastle-under-Lyme in recent years, but Newcastle-under-Lyme remains aloof. — W. Clews, 2025 Courser Drive, Sidney.

Futile exercise

The time has arrived when Esquimalt's mayor and aldermen should ask the people of Esquimalt if they want their own separate police and fire departments, or if they want the Victoria Fire Department to take over fire protection in the municipality. The latter, of course, would be the first step towards complete amalgamation with Victoria and eventual control by the Capital Region District Board.

A referendum is the only way to settle this issue, once and for all.

There has been enough behind closed doors negotiating with Victoria city representatives, the provincial police commission, the provincial fire marshal's representatives, the Esquimalt police board and the union concerned. To date it has been an exercise in futility, a waste of time and money, a breeder of strained relationships between certain councilmen. — George R. Banfield, 847 Carrie Street.

Start from scratch

The article by Moira Farrow "Who needs provincial governments?" in the July 4 Times, sets the present constitutional controversy in a refreshingly new context.

Surely the chief reason for the existence of provincial governments must have been the vastness of this country. But the ever-increasing speed of modern travel and communications has reduced its size to manageable proportios. A central government with a number of regional offices, as Ms. Farrow suggests, coupled perhaps with some form of proportional representation and a slightly increased number o representatives could probably do a more efficient job more cheaply.

A tremendous amount of planning would, of course, be needed to ensure adequate representation of regional concerns. It would then be the function of the central government to reconcile conflicts of interest, striving for consensus, but failing that, prepared to justify its decisions fully and openly by showing them to be in the best interests of Canada as a whole.

Is the west really filled with hatred and suspicion of the east? Do we want advantages gained at the expense of other provinces? I don't believe it.

So long as we depend on agreement between the federal government and the provincial premiers our chances of a new constitution in the foreseeable future seem to be minimal. However, whatever the future may bring, provincial governments are a present reality. Because what is at stake for the premiers is their own power and status, they seem to be singularly unsuited for the task before them. Certainly we elected them, but not for this purpose. How can they possibly be unbiased?

Surely there are in Canada men of wisdom and understanding, men of varied political persuasions, and from many parts of the country — from the universities, business, the trade unions, the professions, the arts, who could look at our problems in perspective. The premiers could play an invaluable role as resource personnel, but they should not be the final arbiters.

We need more than a jazzed up version of the old constitution. We need to start from scratch. — Adeline Fraser, 404-118 Croft Street.

Mexico charts its own course

By ALAN RIDING
New York Times

Portillo embraces Cuba's Castro

MEXICO CITY — In the early 1970s, Mexico looked to Canada for guidance on how to handle economic domination by their common neighbor. Now, with its chest and coffers swollen by oil revenues, Mexico is giving Canada some lessons on dealing with the United States.

During a recent visit to Ottawa, President Jose Lopez Portillo squelched speculation in Washington about a North American common market, declaring that Mexico's energy resources would not be used to sustain the "very high standard of living" of others. Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau quickly added that a common market with the United States was not for Canada either.

Even earlier, Mexico took the lead, holding out for higher prices for its natural gas exports to the United States. After an agreement was reached with Mexico last September, Canada asked a similar price for its much larger gas sales to the United States.

Lumped together

Mexico and Canada have little in common beyond their economic dependence on the United States. Canada is infinitely more developed. Unlike Mexico, it has a food surplus and its industrial products compete in world markets. But the two countries, along with Brazil and Argentina, have been lumped together in the official jargon of Western economists as "newly industrializing countries" or "NIC's." Their level of development is leading them to seek varying degrees of economic and political independence from the United States. Last month, the Canadian government announced it is planning legislation to subsidize Canadian companies seeking to buy out foreign-owned concerns.

So far, there has been no ganging up against Washington. Even Mexico's aggressive new hemispheric policy, exemplified by President Lopez Portillo's Canadian trip in May and a planned visit to Brazil late this month, seem designed more to diversify Mexico's economic relations than to undermine ties with the United States. For example, Mexican trade with Canada last year of $270 million was just 2 per cent of its trade with the United States.

Brazil and Argentina have been less dependent on the United States. Brazil's trade with the United States last year accounted for only 20 per cent of its total compared to 70 per cent for both Canada and Mexico. The United States share of foreign investment in Argentina is about 40 per cent, as against 70 per cent in Mexico.

Both South American military regimes have complained of undue political interference from Washington, however, mostly over human rights. Interests have also clashed, in Brazil's case over nuclear policy — Washington tried to prevent a West German sale of enriched uranium to oil-poor Brazil — and with Argentina, over its grain exports to the Soviet Union after the Afghanistan invasion.

None of the hemisphere's "NIC's" has been redefining its foreign policy in terms of national priorities more vigorously than Mexico, however. "The fact that Mexico's ties with the United States represent the cornerstone of its foreign policy does not entail a passive or submissive acceptance of political, economic or cultural dependence," Foreign Minister Jorge Castaneda said in New York last month.

The change, of course, has been wrought by oil, which has supplied both a bargaining chip with the United States and the money to modernize and diversify the Mexican economy. Suddenly, on a range of bilateral issues from natural gas to tuna fishing rights, Washington is facing a self-confident Mexico that seems almost anxious to rewrite their historical relationship.

Go Olympics

In its other foreign relations, Mexico has also been pointedly independent. It has sent a team to the Moscow Olympics, boycotting the United States boycott. After the seizure of the United States hostages in Teheran, Mexico refused to allow the deposed Shah of Iran to resume his exile here, noting that Mexico had no reason to become embroiled "in a conflict which is not ours." In oil policy, Mexico follows the prices set by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, but has not joined the cartel. Mexico has decided to limit its exports through 1982 to around 1.1 million barrels per day, not as a function of world market conditions, but to avoid economic "indigestion" from a too-quick infusion of revenue.

Such is the demand for Mexican oil from countries anxious to reduce their dependence on the Middle East that Mexico has in effect attached a "development premium" on its sales: Buyers are expected to contribute to Mexico's development through industrial cooperation, financing, technology and joint investment. The government explains teasingly that development will enable Mexico to absorb higher oil revenues and therefore to increase its oil exports. Such agreements have been worked out with Japan, France, Sweden and Canada.

Rejects GATT

Significantly, no such partnership is contemplated with the United States. In fact, Mexico indirectly rejected closer economic ties with the United States when it decided in March not to join the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, arguing that its highly protected industrial sector could not withstand greater competition from United States products. Yet Mexico's economic dependence on the United States remains overwhelming, so great that most of its oil exports will continue to go north, if only to pay for huge imports of capital goods and basic grains. Last year, the United States bought 80 per cent of Mexico's oil exports, although that share — but not the volume — has now dropped to about 65 per cent.

Canada's experience illustrates the difficulties that Mexico will face in paring down these ties. When Prime Mininster Trudeau first took office in 1968, he tried to diversify Canada's trade by exploring markets in Europe, China and Japan. But, more even than Mexico, Canada has a "satellite economy" geared to supplying the United States as well as Canadian markets. The United States-owned automotive industry in Canada is a case in point. And Canadian natural gas, unless it is liquefied at great expense, can be sold only to the United States.

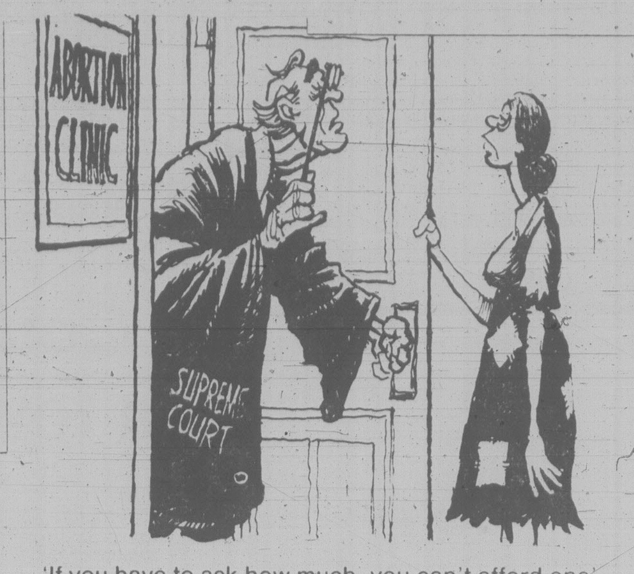
Like the United States, Canada is also likely to be hurt by the industrial development of Mexico, Brazil and Argentina, where labor is cheaper, profits higher, environmental controls slacker and markets growing more rapidly. As United States auto companies are closing down plants in the United States and Canada, they are expanding in Mexico and Argentina.

Cynical ruling by court

By ELLEN GOODMAN

"The law in its majestic equality forbids the rich as well as the poor to sleep under bridges, to beg in the streets, and to steal bread."
— Anatole France

The law in its majestic equality allows the poor as well as the rich to pay for their own abortions.
— The U.S. Supreme Court



'If you have to ask how much, you can't afford one'

BOSTON — These two pieces of public policy have meshed in my mind in the week since the Supreme Court ruled by one vote that Congress could play politics with Medicaid.

The five men in the majority said that it is perfectly constitutional for Congress to award and withhold payment for medical treatment according to its own morality. The five men said that it is perfectly constitutional for Congress to place a higher value on the potential life of a fetus than on the health of the woman carrying it.

If, of course, that woman is poor.

They have presented all of us with a perfectly constitutional and utterly cynical piece of Americana. Life isn't fair: The rich get richer and the poor have children.

It seems to me that this decision says more about economics in our culture than about abortion. The majority opinion talked about money as only the affluent can, as if it were just an incidental difference in the lives of people.

The Hyde Amendment, said the decision, had not prohibited the poor from seeking abortions, but "merely" withheld the money to pay for them.

Furthermore, the government as bill-payer has a right to decide what bills it will pay. It can, said Justice Stewart, establish "incentives that make childbirth a more attractive alternative than abortion for persons eligible for Medicaid." He speaks of "incentives" as if the Hyde Amendment were a tax credit instead of a punishment for poverty.

By its own tortured reasoning, the justices managed to accomplish their continuing goal, to turn back another controversial policy to the legislative arena.

But at the same time they wrote a classic opinion of the American Way of Life in which money talks and the poor are lectured. A way of life in which the one inequality we accept is economic.

Not long ago, Barbara Ward, the social critic, wrote: "I have the impression that when we talk so confidently of liberty we are unaware of the awful servitude . . . of poverty when means are so small that there is literally no choice."

"This case," as Justice Brennan wrote in his dissenting opinion, "involves a special exclusion of women who, by definition, are confronted with a choice between two serious harms: serious health damage to themselves on the one hand, and abortion on the other."

This is precisely the difficult point that middle-class women can decide by themselves with their physicians. Poor women, however, have been told by their government that they are valued more as vessels of the unborn.

There is nothing new here in our attitude toward the poor. The "incentive" to have children stops abruptly at birth. The Congress that cares so deeply about pregnancy promises no decent life at the other end of the birth canal for mother or child.

We will go on judging the poor for not controlling their lives, their destinies, their families — even as we go on limiting their ability to do so. We will go on letting the government invade their lives — even as we rule it out of ours.

Henry Hyde likes to say that those who favor legalized abortion are "elitists." He jovially calls those in favor of choice and privacy "Gucci Bolsheviks."

But it is not the rich who will ever suffer from abortion restrictions, even an anti-abortion constitutional amendment. They would do what they did before legalized abortion: fly themselves or their daughters to London, to Copenhagen, to safe distant clinics.

It is the poor who are most vulnerable, and the first affected by this wedge hammered into abortion rights. But soon, if the anti-abortion amendment is passed, the rest of us may be left with only one right: The law in its majestic equality will allow all of us to book a space on that flight.

Planet of the apes?

Katharine Whitehorn

LONDON — The world's first primatarium was opened last week in London by cabinet minister Michael Heseltine; not, we understand, because this golden-haired buccaneer is so often referred to as Tarzan, but because he happens to be minister of the environment.

And it is by mucking up their environment, it seems, that we are mostly cutting down the numbers of our closest cousins, the apes. Using a technique of fading up pictures and lights on a screen, the presentation at the primatarium gave us a taste of the apes in their natural habitat.

The rain-forest was especially effective; the stalls and orchestra pit of the old theatre which they have formed to make the primatarium have been built in rocky formations, the screen is bedded in a realistic mass of natural "stone" and at one point the stereo sound of crashing rain, with slashing lights like heavy raindrops filling the theatre, gave a deafening impression of the real thing.

And when the light flooded back, lo! there was a real waterfall cascading down the unreal rocks. It should become a tourist attraction to rate with the zoo and the planetarium — indeed, "planetarium of the apes" would be as good a name for it as any.

The drive behind this idea comes from the International Primate Protection League, whose work is made harder by the simple fact that the apes are so like man. You might think it would stir our sympathy towards them, and I daresay it does, but of course it also makes them too useful for experiments to determine whether this or that drug is going to do mankind a bit of harm. What with that and the gradual encroaching of our sort of hominid upon their territory, there are too many threatened species — in fact, most of the ones that you and I have ever heard of — gorilla, chimpanzee, orang-outang, lemur, gibbon.

Looking at the various pictures of them, it amazes me that Darwin should have had so much trouble convincing his 19th century world that these were indeed our relatives. That gorilla — didn't they have night-club bouncers in the 19th century? They certainly had policemen and coal-haulers and cab-drivers; you'd have thought the family likeness couldn't be missed. The hug of the orang-outang is like that of any over-eager uncle, or beefy golf-playing buddy.

Surely there are mornings when we all feel like the sad-eyed lorises; and no one's ever doubted — at least no parent has ever doubted — that chimpanzees and children have a lot in common. Perhaps it was just the word that put the Victorians off. "Primate," which describes the creature with the handy thumb-and-finger combination, was, of course, their word for a bishop — and few people call a bishop a monkey and get away with it.

One thing still puzzles me: why do almost all apes look so sad? The melancholy of the apes in attendance at the opening party was intense, but that's not surprising — who wouldn't look gloomy kept waiting so long for the VIP at a stand-up cocktail party? It's the others.

They all have a doomed, faraway look, as if they knew it would all end badly, as if there was no hope for the world, as if the life of apes, too, is "nasty, brutish and short". Is it possible that all our civilization, all our agriculture and machinery and factories and orchestras and books and paintings were built up, originally, just to keep our minds off the dark, primeval secret, the message of doom to mankind, which only the apes can know?

Water trouble still a mystery

Capital Regional District health officer Dr. Allan Arneil says water from Salt Spring Island's St. Mary Lake is safe to drink but he admits some people who have used it have become sick.

In the reports about the offensive tastes and odors of the water, the fact that several people suffered some stomach upsets was largely overlooked.

Arneil announced that tests for bacteria had all proved negative and that the water is safe to drink.

But he doesn't know what's causing the bad tastes and odors or if, in fact, there is some contamination problem other than bacteria.

Arneil said 11 samples were taken from the four major water systems drawing water from the lake.

There was a miniscule reading on one sample and 10 others came up negative.

Arneil consulted with four doctors on the island who had treated several residents with stomach complaints. Symptoms included flatulence, cramps and bloating, but none of it was deemed serious.

"As far as I can make out," Arneil said, "it's been a matter of a few more tummy upsets, but nothing of any great note."

Asked about the "swimmer's itch" which has occasionally been a problem in St. Mary Lake, Arneil said it hadn't even been considered.

"The itch," as residents who swim in the lake often call it, is a skin irritation called schistosomiasis.

It's caused by a microscopic creature called a schistosome, and it gets into a lake from bird droppings.

Before it can reinfect another bird, the schistosome must enter a freshwater snail. It then re-enters the water as a free swimming cercaria.

When it reinfects a bird, it can complete its life cycle.

But when it enters a human through the skin it simply dies, causing an itchy irritation similar to a mosquito bite.

Egyptian schistosomiasis is fatal but its North American counterpart, so far as is known, is merely discomforting.

Arneil speculated that the chlorine used by the St. Mary Lake water systems would kill schistosomes, but he said as far as he knows, no studies have been done as to what effect they would have if ingested by humans.

In the meantime, although the water has been deemed safe for drinking, there are still residents who can't bear to bring it near their noses.

Council faces a fowl dilemma

Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier said Tuesday council must solve the dilemma faced by the owner of dilapidated Claremont Poultry Farm in Cordova Bay.

Farm owner Peter Goddard expected to sell the property after it was sewered as part of a five-year, $5 million municipal project.

However, he learned recently his property may not be sewered until 1996.

Goddard said he wants to sell the land for resident developement and move his poultry farm to another location.

Area residents have complained at recent public meetings about flies buzzing around the old buildings and raw sewage seeping across the property.

Goddard, who spends $3,000 a year on fly spray, told aldermen this week he delayed fixing the buildings because he was told sewers would be coming soon.

If the property is not included in the sewer project, Goddard said he will spend $500,000 to upgrade it.

Couvelier said council should solve Goddard's problem by deciding whether to include his property in the sewer area.

School districts to be realigned

Realignment of school boundaries in the Royal Oak area will involve consultation with parents in adjoining Greater Victoria and Saanich school districts.

Saanich District 63 trustees were told this week that Victoria District 61 authorities are in general agreement on the proposal to divide school populations more evenly in that area, where residential growth involves both districts, plus the hazard of the arterial Patricia Bay Highway.

For some District 63 pupils it would be more convenient and safer to attend school in Greater Victoria district.

Three schools in the general area belong in Saanich district and two are part of Greater Victoria district.

In some schools population is declining and classrooms are becoming surplus; in others enrolments are swelling and space is a problem.

Saanich superintendent Don Smyth is drawing up a plan for consulting parents in the area embraced by the highway, Quadra Street and the east-west district boundary which existed before subdivision of the area.

Recreation report urges doubling CRD parks levy

Residents of the Capital Regional District should pay more for their public parks, directors were told Tuesday.

The levy for regional parks should be increased from half a mill to the maximum statutory limit of one mill, the draft of a master parks plan recommends.

Brian Johnston, of Professional Environmental Recreation consultants, told a joint meeting of the regional parks and regional planning and economic development committees that the plan consists of two parts.

The first is a regional overview, showing where excesses or deficiencies in parks and recreational facilities exist. The second shows component plans for the participants in the plan — Esquimalt, Juan de Fuca, Saanich Peninsula, Saanich, Victoria, View Royal and the regional parks themselves.

The extensive eight-month study contains many recommendations for the regional district and the participating components. It shows that the parks system is the most popular service of the CRD and is delivered at a reasonable cost of $1.72 per capita.

This is raised by the half-mill levy, which amounted to $402,245 in 1979. In total, Johnston said, the seven municipalities and five electoral areas spent more than $9.5 million on parks and recreation facilities, a total of $40.73 per person.

Some areas, Johnston said, like View Royal and Central Saanich, were getting a free ride from neighboring municipalities and their residents should pay levies on a usage basis.

The plan recommends a marine drive around the Saanich Peninsula and west to Metchosin should be considered and a trail system joining major regional parks should be established, complemented by additional trails in the Highlands area and the use of abandoned railway right-of-ways.

Johnston said there were enough indoor skating facilities in the regional district, there was no serious lack of tennis courts although more will be needed in the future, more ball diamonds, soccer pitches and lawn bowling facilities were needed, as well as a few more hockey areas.

He suggested a committee be set up, answerable to the regional board,

The draft report was well received by the directors, who took no action, preferring to wait until such time as the participating components study it.

Abortion panel woes aired

Health Minister Rafe Mair said Tuesday he has no plans to intervene at this time in hospital board elections over the abortion issue.

He was commenting on a letter signed by 174 Greater Vancouver physicians expressing concern about a possible takeover of boards by the Pro-Life Society, an anti-abortion group.

The doctors said the single-issue group could disrupt hospital administration because they would ignore all other important problems while focussing one on question.

Mair said he saw no evidence that any board is dealing with a single issue to the detriment of its hospital.

Durrance Lake road another step closer

A new road to Willis Point and Durrance Lake has been given the stamp of approval by two Capital Regional District committees.

The road would be an extension of Hartland Road, joining the present Willis Point Road west of Durrance Lake. A dead-end access to Durrance Lake park would be the current road, running from the east.

The provincial highways ministry is planning the new route because the federal government is concerned that the road now in use crosses Heal's rifle range.

Directors on the regional parks and regional planning and economic development committees decided to recommend approval, providing provision is made for a future access road to Mount Work Regional Park and that a shrub-covered embankment be built beside the road to screen off the Hartland Road dump.

Directors also want the road to be designed to avoid a small creek at the south end of the dump and a satisfactory price given for the land.

A report by chief regional planner C.H. Wakelin said the ministry was anxious to begin survey work and asked that recommendations go directly to the ministry.

Sidney Mayor Norma Sealey was unsuccessful in a bid to have another rider added — that policing of Durrance Lake be transferred from the Sidney RCMP to the Colwood RCMP detachment. She also suggested that the Willis Point area should be absorbed into North Saanich because of its close proximity and the residents' use of North Saanich facilities.

View Royal director Al Beasley pointed out the new road would eliminate several dangerous S-curves on the current roadway.

NDP seeks emergency debate on gas pipeline

The New Democratic Party called for an emergency debate Tuesday on the proposed Alaska Highway natural gas pipeline, saying the provincial government should not rely on Alberta's word that B.C. would not lose markets because of the pipeline.

The federal government is expected to give approval this week for construction of the prebuild portion of the pipeline, which would give Alberta an additional route for transporting gas to southern markets.

The provincial government has said it fears the pipeline could displace B.C. sales of natural gas to U.S. customers, a concern the Alberta government says is unfounded.

NDP Leader Dave Barrett said he is skeptical about Alberta's reassurances and said B.C. should seek a guarantee from Ottawa that B.C. would not lose gas markets to the pipeline.

Deputy speaker Walter Davidson later rejected the call for an emergency debate, saying the matter could be dealt with during debate on energy ministry estimates.

Sunday close bill open to change

Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm said Tuesday the government is still flexible on its proposed holiday shopping legislation.

The legislation, which allows municipalities to decide if stores may open Sundays, has drawn thousands of protest letters from all over the province.

Vander Zalm said the government is open to suggestions to improve the legislation, despite the fact Attorney-General Allan Williams has said there will be no changes.

SC takes rollcall on NDP

Attendance in the legislature by New Democratic Party members is terrible, says Bill Ritchie, Social Credit party caucus chairman who has been keeping a private record of the opposition's hours.

Ritchie's figures show several NDP MLAs have been away from the chamber for more than 15 days during the 4½-month session.

The NDP tried twice early in the session — and again last week — to get the government to hold night sittings, accusing the Social Credit members of laziness.

Ritchie said it's the NDP who are lazy.

"They have been quite critical of us not having night sittings and went as far as to call us a bunch of lazy people," Ritchie said.

"I felt that it was only proper that I should be able at any time to say, 'Listen, why are you screaming for more hours in the chamber when you don't even use the hours that are allotted to us.' Their attendance in the chamber is just terrible."

All MLAs — who are allowed 10 days absence, excluding sickness or government business, during a six-month period — were required to report their attendance records up to July 1 in a sworn statement by Tuesday. For each day missed after the 10 days, an MLA is fined $250.

Only one MLA — Gary Lauk (NDP — Vancouver Centre) — will be forced to pay. He was away for 13 days, with only one listed as due to sickness.

Emery Barnes (NDP — Vancouver Centre), Stu Leggatt (NDP — Coquitlam-Moody) and Bill King (NDP — Shuswap-Revelstoke) also were away for more than 10 days, but were sick for a good part of the time.

The Social Credit caucus figures differ in some cases from those submitted by the MLAs, although Ritchie admitted they don't have to be in the chamber to be recorded as at work for their attendance declaration. But if they are in the precincts, he said, they should also be in the chamber.

Most noticeable discrepancies exist for Barnes — who said he missed 15 days, but is recorded by the government members as being absent 24 — and D'Arcy — whose statement says he missed 11 days, but is recorded as missing 18 by the Socreds.

"If that was the record of our MLAs, we'd be talking to them, particularly if they were being critical of others for not sitting more hours," Ritchie said.

Premier Bill Bennett missed the most days of any Social Credit MLA — all 10 on government business. Several government MLAs, including all backbenchers but Ritchie, who was in hospital for three weeks, attended every day up to July 1.

Dayliner back together after repairs to one car

The E & N Railway's Dayliner is a two-car unit again today after an accident Sunday put one of them in the shop for repairs.

For the last two days, the Dayliner was reduced to one car. Some passengers were forced to stand during the up-Island trip, while others — upon arriving at the station and discovering the situation — chose not to travel.

The accident occurred Sunday at 5:10 p.m. when a vehicle drove through a railway intersection near the corner of Fairview and Devonshire in Victoria. The Dayliner hit the rear of the vehicle. No serious injuries resulted but the vehicle was demolished.

Although the accident damaged only the steps on one of the Dayliner's cars, the car couldn't be used until repaired.

Passengers forced to stand because of a shortage of seats don't receive any discount rate, said Fred Hamilton, sales manager for Via Rail which operates the E & N.

Two new cars were supposed to have arrived earlier this month to replace the 25-year-old units now in service, but unexpected delays have held up their delivery for at least another two weeks.

Via Rail has been asked to leave at least one of the old cars in Victoria as a backup after the new ones arrive, said John Cooper of the E & N Steering Committee.

Running out of addicts

The provincial government's compulsory heroin treatment centre at Brannen Lake is draining funds that could be used to better advantage, the New Democratic Party health critic Dennis Cocke said Tuesday.

He told the legislature the program is having trouble finding enough addicts and has begun treating people with other problems.

Cocke said the NDP had warned the program would be a flop.

In response, Health Minister Rafe Mair conceded the treatment centre had not worked as well as hoped.

"We are all trying to solve the problem . . . and I don't think we should be frightened of failure.

Mair said he has become aware that most addicts get involved in a variety of drugs, ranging from alcohol to prescription drugs to narcotics.

"We have spent far too much time on one of the glamorous addictions."

Theology school governor

University of Victoria Anglican chaplain Walter Donald has been elected by the church's provincial synod to the board of governors at Vancouver School of Theology on University of B.C. campus.

The ecumenical school established in 1971 replaced separate colleges operated by the Anglican and United Churches at UBC.

Donald said there is a need to re-examine Christian ministry concepts and the objectives of a theological education in view of a steady outflow of ordained ministers simultaneous with increased demand for serious religious studies.

A large number of persons have left the ordained ministry during the past 15 years, he said.

"We also need to develop programs better suited to the needs of specialized ministries in remote geographical areas and for non-stipendary ordained pastors," he said.

Brutal beating of woman nets four-year term

Dale Lawrence Anfield, 24, was sentenced in Victoria county court Tuesday to four years in penitentiary after being found guilty of assault causing bodily harm to Deanna Kim Dignan, 24, in an early morning incident downtown on April 28, 1979.

"Society must be protected from vicious, cowardly actions of this kind," said Judge Peter Millward who expressed the hope that Anfield will receive treatment for his lack of self-control.

Millward said he was unable to understand why a person would act as Anfield did but whatever the motivation it was clearly unacceptable.

As Millward started to leave the courtroom, Anfield exclaimed "gee, wait a minute your honor" and as he was being handcuffed and led away he said "oh man, oh man, oh man."

The sentence was believed by court observers to be one of the longest in Victoria for assault causing bodily harm. An appeal was expected.

Millward had told Anfield he was taking into account his age, the likelihood of his rehabilitation and the fact he has spent three months in custody already.

In finding Anfield guilty as charged, Millward said photographs showed Dignan was severely injured in the head and face. Anfield had approached her and her girlfriend and as Dignan was getting into a taxi at Fort and Government he kicked her a number of times with his steel-toed boot.

There was, said Millward, no evidence of provocation or justification and "no rational, or indeed any, explanation offered for the attack."

After being found guilty, Anfield testified in sentencing proceedings he kicked the woman once but it was in self-defence.

He said he had drunk 10 or 12 beers the previous evening and smoked four or five joints of marijuana. He approached the two women, each of whom was carrying a bottle of cider, and asked for a drink of beer.

He said he was trying to be sociable to Dignan's girl friend but was met with obscenities from Dignan, who denied this when she testified.

When the women got into the taxi, Anfield said Dignan flung the door open and jumped out at him and tried to hit him with a bottle and he kicked her once. It was possible the door struck her face, he said.

Dignan said Anfield approached her and her girlfriend asking for a beer and she told him to leave them alone. As they were getting into the taxi, he shouted an obscenity at her.

She said Anfield kicked the door closed on her leg, then kicked her in the head and punched her several times. She said Anfield made no pass at her girlfriend.

A nearby taxi driver, Thomas Shore, said Anfield opened the door after the two women got in, stepped back and started to kick the woman a number of times. He and another man chased Anfield who was arrested by police in Harbor Square.

Crown counsel Clinton Kittle said Anfield has a criminal record of seven offences in 1975 including common assault and possession of a weapon.

He said the court must reflect and feel the horror of the community at a severe and brutal attack on a defenceless woman by a muscular young man with steel-toed boots.

He said there has to be an element of punishment and retribution so the community knows that justice is being done. But Millward said he did not accept that retribution should be taken into account.

Defence counsel Christopher Brennan said Anfield never denied in court that he assaulted Dignan. The reason for the trial was that he denied kicking her more than once, he said.

He asked Millward to consider what happened as a stupid and impulsive act rather than an aggravated assault.

Pilot's death ends probe

VANCOUVER (CP) — The recent death of Coquitlam helicopter pilot James Ford Collins in Ontario has ended Transport Canada proceedings involving his role as pilot of a helicopter which allegedly interfered with attempts to recover wreckage of a light plane in Pitt Lake.

A coroner's inquest in April was told an underwater search team looking for a crashed light aircraft at Pitt Lake in Maple Ridge last February was hampered by a helicopter carrying a television reporter and cameraman.

The search team lost the wreck until later, when poor weather made the recovery operation too dangerous to continue.

A coroner's jury recommended Transport Canada investigate the helicopter incident and consider disciplinary action.

The jury was told that although the body of passenger Steve Haupert, 22, of Scarborough, Ont., was found, an attempt to recover the body of pilot David Waddington, 24, and the plane had to be abandoned.

Steve Rybak, regional manager of public affairs for Transport Canada, said "it's extremely difficult to do anything now," adding that Collins had been flying helicopters fighting forest fires in Ontario for the last several months.

Collins, 36, was killed Sunday when his firefighting helicopter crashed near Gull Bay, 150 kilometres north of Thunder Bay.

Native people vote 86% no in Quebec

QUEBEC (CP) — About 86 per cent of Quebec native people voted no in last May's referendum with 3,731 votes being cast for this option while 630 votes or 14.4 per cent were cast in favor of the yes option.

Although native leaders called on tribe members to abstain from voting, this advice was apparently not followed in several reserves where more than 50 per cent of the eligible voters cast their ballots. The referendum ballots were printed in the various native languages.

Only two reserves had a majority of yes votes in favor of the referendum question in which the Quebec government asked for a mandate.

Before the judge

Judge Blake Allan said in Victoria provincial court Tuesday he would recommend to the superintendent of motor vehicles that a 20-year-old youth's driving privileges be suspended for six months.

Clive William Patterson, 20, of 3300 Richmond, pleaded guilty to dangerous driving but entered a not guilty plea to a charge of obstructing an Oak Bay police constable in the execution of his duty. A trial date of Aug. 14 was set for the obstruction charge.

Crown counsel Wayne Smith told the court Patterson was seen in a vehicle heading east on Lansdowne about 2 a.m. last Thursday, turning left through a red traffic light at Cadboro Bay.

Smith said the police vehicle began to follow about three blocks behind at a speed of 110 kmh and was not gaining on Patterson. The police continued to follow Patterson along Cedar Hill and Henderson, where the speed went over 110 kmh through another red light. Emergency equipment was then activated and the chase proceeded to Foul Bay Road where Patterson went through a third red light.

On Richmond Road, he went through a fourth red light while turning right then pulled into the driveway of his residence where he was arrested. Smith said Patterson quickly turned off his headlights as soon as he turned into his driveway.

Total distance of the pursuit was 4.6 kilometres, court was informed.

Patterson said he did not try to outrun the police but was not aware of the officers until he was in his driveway.

Allan imposed a $300 fine and also stated he would forward the recommendation for the driving ban.

Fined $450 each for drinking-driving offences were: Kevin Thomas O'Neill, 28, of 651A Kelly Road, and Albert Ed Ashurst, 60, of 2635 Bowker.

A 19-year-old youth was fined $100 for shouting on a Victoria street April 18.

Roy Derek Patterson, of 4014 Osgood, pleaded guilty to causing a disturbance by shouting on Myrtle Street.

Victoria police were called to the 2900-block Belmont at about 10:30 p.m. because of youths drinking on the road. When officers arrived, they found about 100 youths who were attending a houseparty on Myrtle.

Some of the youths, including Patterson, were asked to leave and Patterson walked along the 1500-block Myrtle yelling and creating a great deal of noise, court was told.

RCMP jailing appealed

VANCOUVER (CP) — An RCMP constable sentenced last month by the B.C. Court of Appeal to an intermittent 30-day prison term following an assault conviction is appealing the decision to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Victoria lawyer Dermod Owen-Flood, acting for Duncan RCMP constable Lorne James Harper, 30, said Tuesday he has filed an application seeking leave to appeal the sentence to Canada's highest court.

Meanwhile, Harper, who has been an RCMP member for about 4½ years, remains on active duty at the Duncan detachment, the lawyer said in an interview.

Harper was convicted of assault causing bodily harm for punching a man in the mouth and face during an arrest in February, 1978. However, he received a conditional discharge in April last year in Nanaimo county court.

The Crown appealed the county court decision and it was overturned by the B.C. Court of Appeal, which sentenced Harper to the 30-day jail term, to be served on weekends.

Monster spotted in Quebec lake

MANIWAKI, Que. (CP) — Harold Harris has a fish story to top all fish stories.

The retired credit office manager was taking a dip in the peaceful waters of nearby Lake Baskatong last Sunday when he encountered a huge, greenish creature that he said easily rivalled the infamous Loch Ness monster in appearance.

Harris said he was up to his waist in the lake, about 150 kilometers north of Ottawa, when he heard a swishing sound and saw a strange, heavy movement about nine metres away.

"As it moved forward, it undulated up and down like a massive boa constrictor," he recalled Tuesday.

"Then a head — about the size of a horse's head but not the same shape — came out of the water and went back down."

The monster was between nine and 12 metres long and had a row of jagged spines rising out of the water, says Harris. His wife, Jacqueline, also saw the creature through binoculars from their cottage before it disappeared into the lake again.

MP seeks Arab investment in Indians

KAMLOOPS (CP) — Kamloops MP Nelson Riis said he will seek investment for Canadian Indian bands during his visit to the Middle East during the next week.

Riis (NDP — Kamloops-Shuswap) said he thinks the Arabs will be interested because Middle East countries are eager to aid the Third World "and Indians are effectively Third World peoples within Canada."

He said Indian bands have never been able to obtain sufficient capital investment from either the federal government or from banks.

With enough capital, bands would at least have a chance of becoming self-sufficient, Riis said.

He said he plans to suggest such ventures as cottage industries or small farms, where the produce could be sold back to the Arab countries.

Riis said the Middle East is a lucrative market for Canadian small business. One of the major problems for that sector of the economy is that they rely too much on the North American market, he said.

Riis, the NDP's small business critic in Ottawa, said he is currently compiling a profile of small business opportunities.

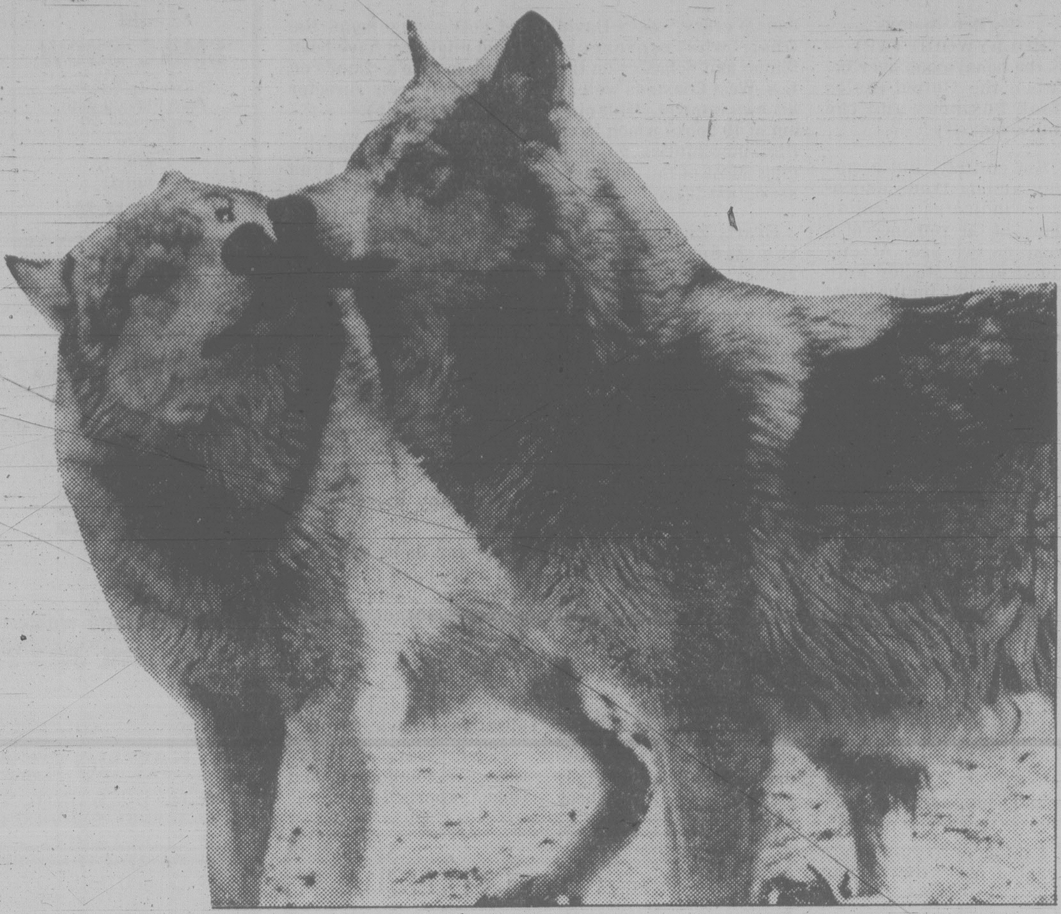
Ten years ago, Vancouver Island's wolves were on the verge of extinction. Now, they are making inroads in the deer population, harassing livestock, and threatening people.

Island wolf packs growing menace



Once again, Island's wolves are target for trappers — and may face poison next

By DEREK SIDENIUS

A dramatic increase in wolves on Vancouver Island is posing a threat to wildlife, livestock and even humans, officials of the provincial Fish and Wildlife branch say.

And if the population isn't soon controlled, the situation could become serious, they warn.

In the past year, officials say there have been three reports of wolves harassing humans and one case of a direct attack.

The attack hasn't yet been confirmed, but if it is it would be the first ever against a human in North America.

The expanding wolf population has caught most biologists by surprise.

Ten years ago the Vancouver Island wolf, a separate subspecies of the North American timber wolf, seemed to be on the brink of extinction. Wildlife officials put it on the endangered list.

But today the animal is thriving as never before. In some areas of the northern Island the wolf density is among the highest on the continent.

The burgeoning population isn't unique to the Island.

Dr. Daryll Hebert, regional wildlife biologist based in Nanaimo, says wolves have made a dramatic comeback in the last decade from California to Alaska.

The weather is probably the biggest single reason, he says. Relatively warm winters over the past six or seven years have resulted in extraordinarily high deer survival rates which has provided wolves with an abundant food supply, he says.

But the pendulum is shifting. The deer populations are beginning to drop in areas of high wolf density.

In the Nimpkish Valley, one of the major deer areas on the Island, the number of fawns surviving to yearling stage has dropped from an average of 20 to 30 per cent to five to seven per cent in the past two years. Hebert says the wolf is the culprit.

Wildlife officials are concerned about the consequences of a depletion in the deer stocks. Starved of their natural food supply, wolves will be forced to turn to other prey, including livestock.

And this is happening already. Hebert says there have been several cases of livestock kills by wolves in the past year on the northern end of the Island.

But most alarming are fears that the expanding wolf population may result in attacks on humans.

Hebert cites four cases. Three of them last fall involved a logger treed by a pack of wolves at Loughborough Sound and two hunters, one at Iron River near Sayward and the other at Power River on the west coast, who reported they had been menaced by wolves.

One of the hunters, James Terris of Campbell River, said a pack of eight wolves followed him on both sides of a trail for nearly half an hour. He killed one of the wolves and then shot at two others but the pack didn't disperse.

The fourth and most serious incident happened last May 6 on Hernando Island, a small private island south of Cortes Island.

Dawne McGarvey, 33-year-old resident-caretaker, said she was walking along the beach towards her home when a wolf approached.

The animal kept coming straight at her and forced her to the water's edge.

She said she backed into the water but the wolf waded in and started to swim after her.

She picked up a rock.

"There was so much hitting and thrashing I don't know what happened," she said in an interview. "I was yelling and screaming and I think I must have landed a good blow because he turned and went away. It was terrifying."

She got in her boat and went to Powell River where doctors treated her for shock and a bite mark on her arm.

Wildlife officials have investigated the report but have refused to authenticate the attack as there were no witnesses nor confirmation the bite mark was made by a wolf.

Said McGarvery: "How could they confirm the mark? My doctor said he'd never treated a wolf bite before."

The wolf, one of two which migrated to the island three years ago, was shot and killed three weeks ago. McGarvey shot the other about 18 months ago when it appeared in her backyard and attacked her chickens and dogs.

Frank Tompa, senior officer in charge of carnivore management in the province, said such incidents are rare.

However, he said the widening distribution of wolves may be bringing about a change in the animal's behavior.

"They may be getting used to people and losing some of their fear."

He said the only authenticated wolf attacks have been in Europe and Asia where man and wolf have been living side-by-side for thousands of years.

Tompa said, however, he didn't feel the problem with wolves is one so much of the possibility of attacks on humans, which he judges to be remote, but rather the effect wolves are having on deer stocks.

It is for that reason that controls are needed, he said.

Several options are open.

He said the branch is lifting its ban on wolves as a fur-yielding animal. That won't have much effect for a couple of years until trappers get new traps.

The branch is also considering raising the bag limit on wolves for hunters. The limit now is three a year except in areas where there is a chronic livestock problem. There the limit is 10.

But that isn't expected to have much impact. The wily wolf is a difficult animal to hunt.

Another option, and the most controversial, is using the deadly canid poison, 10-80 to "selectively manipulate the wolf populations."

Hebert said a proposal is now before a special committee of environmental and wildlife groups in Campbell River.

The proposal seeks to use the poison in a selected area to remove the wolves to see what effect that might have on the deer population.

But one option won't be considered.

There will be no reinstituting the bounty on wolves which was revoked by the government in 1955.

Said Tompa, "As far as we are concerned the wolf is still a protected animal. We intend to protect it, except in those areas where there's a problem."

UVic housing pinch worsens

The housing pinch for University of Victoria students could be worse this year than last unless Victorians come through with help, co-ordinator Shirley Baker said today.

There are fewer listings of private housing now than there were in 1979-80, and UVic enrolment is expected to jump to 8,000 in the coming session.

Baker said that means 4,000 to 5,000 off-campus residence arrangements must be made by incoming students, who are already looking for places to stay.

Baker said there is no relief in sight for crowded campus housing, which is limited to 900 beds. Plans for expanding university residence accommodation are at least a year away.

Residence priority is given to first-year students from out of town. Second choice goes to more senior out-of-town students. Those whose homes are in Victoria are not eligible for residence halls.

Baker said motels and hotels are being asked to offer students their off-season rooms.

Private citizens with extra space suitable for a student between September and mid-April should call the housing co-ordinator's office at UVic, 477-6911.

Heritage house for rent?

A Saanich heritage home built by Capt. Charles Dodd in 1860 will be renovated and rented out, a standing committee of council has decided.

A staff recommendation to spend about $17,000 fixing the house still needs to be endorsed by council Monday.

Municipal solicitor William Tremayne recommends the house remain in Lambrick Park, where it has been for several months.

Little Niagara fall survived

An 18-year-old Saanich man is in satisfactory condition in Victoria General Hospital after tumbling 60 feet while climbing in Goldstream Park Tuesday night.

Murray Joseph Lambert, 3491 Aloha, was climbing a cliff adjacent to Little Niagara Falls with a group of friends about 8 p.m. and had just grabbed a shrub when the roots gave way, Colwood RCMP said.

He fell down the steep incline and landed in the creek bed.

Police and a provincial ambulance crew rescued Lambert and whisked him to hospital.

The extent of his injuries is not known but a police spokesman said they were not believed to be serious.

It was the second hiking mishap in Greater Victoria in the past week.

Last Friday 27-year-old Alison Louise Marshall of Fernie died after she slipped off a ledge in the Sooke River canyon above the potholes and fell about 150 feet.

Murder reward raised

The reward for information leading to the conviction of the killer of Suzanne Seto in Duncan June 3 has been increased from $26,000 to $32,000.

The Chinese Benevolent Association in Vancouver raised the original amount the week following the murder.

Seto, a Vancouver land-use consultant, went to Duncan June 2 to carry out an appraisal.

Her body was found in bush about 75 metres from the Village Green Inn.

ICBC 'bungling' blamed by body shops in squeeze

A surcharge war over body shop rates will spread throughout the province if the Insurance Corporation of B.C. doesn't agree to sit down and negotiate, the general manager of the Automotive Retailers Association warned today.

Ron Baldwin charged the corporation with being aloof to problems in the industry and said even the politicians are afraid to intervene.

"They (ICBC) have simply refused to negotiate with us," Baldwin said.

"It's incredible. We are dealing with a monopoly that is the toughest in the province and maybe the toughest in Canada."

Body shop owners are unhappy with the $25.60 an hour rate which ICBC set last April.

Baldwin said there is no way operators can get by. The rate, increased by $2 or 8.5 per cent over the previous year, is inadequate, he said. Labor costs over the same period have shot up 15.5 per cent.

Several Lower Mainland body shops have started charging customers surcharges up to 22 per cent above the ICBC rate.

The action follows similar moves made last week in Prince George.

So far Victoria operators haven't joined the surcharge war.

But none are happy with the rate being offered.

Said Charlie Forrest, service manager for Metro Toyota: "None of us can live with it, but what can you do?"

Forrest said: "You might as well talk to a gas pump as talk to ICBC."

He said the corporation is able to get its own way because the body shop industry lacks a solid, unified base in the province.

Ninety per cent of the 1,500 body shops are small businesses without the resources or clout to lobby successfully for better rates.

Baldwin said the association tried to meet with the ICBC board of directors prior to April but was refused.

"They simply set the rate and told us to live with it."

Baldwin said the association had agreed to put the matter to binding arbitration but ICBC ignored the offer.

He accused the corporation of using body shop owners as scapegoats for "ICBC bungling in their budgeting."

U.S. fleet's in town

The flagship of a U.S. amphibious assault force and two escorts arrived in Victoria today, and the balance of the fleet is expected Thursday morning.

In all, 2,500 sailors and marines will spend the weekend here.

The USS Belleau Wood, a 778-foot-long Tarawa Class ship with 16 assault helicopters, 900 officers and men and 300 marines aboard, tied up at Ogden Point at 1 p.m. today.

Her escorts, the tank landings ships Tuscaloosa and Cayuga, berthed at jetties F1 and F2 in the Esquimalt dockyard.

The guided missile cruiser William H. Standley arrives at Esquimalt Thursday at 8 a.m., and close behind will be the USS Fort Fisher, an Anchorage class dock landing ship, and the U.S. Coast Guard cutter Midgett.

OFF TO MEXICO to compete with the snakes and eagles of Aztec art is this crest totem featuring the thunderbird, whale, raven, sun and a chief of B.C. Coast Indian lore. Carved by Tony Hunt with Calvin Hunt and John Livingston, the 30-foot cedar pole is for the Canadian embassy in Mexico City. Valued at $30,000, the ornate work is a Hunt family crest pole. It took the trio a month at Hunt's Songhees Road studio near the tank farm.

Marigold asks ban on suits

A court order will be sought in chambers Thursday prohibiting two former residents of the Marigold Housing Co-Operative in Saanich from further legal proceedings without first getting permission from the courts.

The order is sought by Julian Greenwood, counsel for William McElroy. Former residents Gonda and Ernest Blow, in a statement of claim, seek $10,000 damages from McElroy as manager of the co-operative for allegedly issuing a letter notifying another resident her monthly assessment was being almost doubled.

Greenwood's statement of defence filed at the Law Courts said the action was brought earlier in the name of Kim Wright and was dismissed last February by county court Judge Montague Drake. Further action, he said, is now barred and is an abuse of the court process.

"This is the sixth legal proceeding brought since August, 1979, by Blow or with his active urging and is clearly an abuse of the legal process," the defendant's reply stated.

Greenwood said he will apply Thursday to have the Blow statement of claim "struck out as disclosing no reasonable cause of action against the defendant; for being frivolous, vexatious and otherwise an abuse of the court process."

He will also seek an order that both of the Blows "be restrained from instituting any further legal proceedings in any court without further leave of the court."

Books and movies: romance is cooling

By Bob Thomas

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Is the honeymoon over between the United States book business and the movie industry?

Not entirely. But a survey among trade executives indicates a cooling down of the romance of a year or two ago. At that time, movie studios were bidding wildly for the latest bestsellers, and publishers were paying big money for novelizations of potentially hit movies.

"There are fewer books selling to film companies now," observes Nancy Hardin, who has been in both the publishing and agency worlds and is now an executive with CBS Theatrical Films.

"And those that are, are selling at lower than record prices. The auctioning of books is not as lively as it was.

"Today prices for a promising book range between $250,000 and $500,000. A year ago, agents were establishing a $500,000 floor and getting it — or more."

"If four or five producers want a book, the bidding can go crazy," says David Obst, who represents Simon and Schuster on the U.S. West Coast, as well as his own imprint. "But nine out of 10 books which have film possibilities go begging. Most of the contracts are option deals."

Evarts Ziegler, head of the Ziegler-Diskant agency, adds: "The studios are paying as much for heavy deals, but the one made by Gay Talses at $2.5 million (paid by United Artists for Thy Neighbor's Wife) is very rare indeed."

Michael Eisner, president of Paramount Pictures, agrees.

"Prices have peaked in book buying. Every once in a while a bestselling book becomes a major picture, like The Exorcist and Gone with the Wind. But many do not.

"When you pay a lot of money for a book, you have built in such a cost that you tend to be afraid to take chances. Take The Godfather. Paramount paid only $25,000 for ti. If the book had cost a huge sum, the studio might not have been willing to take a chance on a relatively new director (Francis Coppola)."

High-priced properties that scored in the book stores but not in move houses include The Other Side of Midnight, The Betsy, Oliver's Story. Bloodline, King of the Gypsies and this summer's release, The Island.

In the past, studios and publishers have combined to sponsor a property which they hoped would succeed first as a book, than as a film. The formula worked with Love Story.

"Not any more," said Obst.

"As far as a publisher and a producer getting together and making a bestseller — forget it. Most deals are not preplanned."

Another area that has suffered a slump is the novelization of movie scripts.

"Eight years ago there was a revolution in that field," reports Hardin.

It's an exciting game that's fun and easy to enter. The instructions on the dial give you the position of the letters in the "SUMMERFUNTHING" PASSWORD. All you have to do is find the first letter to start. For instance, suppose you started at the letter E and the instructions read 2nd LETTER-FOUR COUNTER CLOCKWISE. Count four spaces in a counter-clockwise direction from the letter E and you arrive at the letter A. The next instruction reads 3rd LETTER-EIGHT COUNTER CLOCKWISE, so count off eight spaces in a counter-clockwise direction from the letter A and you arrive at the letter S. Finally the 4th letter. SIX CLOCKWISE means you count in a clockwise direction from the letter S and you arrive at the letter Y. In this example the PASSWORD is the word E-A-S-Y. To give you another clue and to add to the interest, each day's password is scrambled and you will find it at the bottom of the illustration.

GAME RULES

1. Winners will be chosen by random drawing from all valid entries. All winners must answer a skill testing question.
2. Winners from the previous week will be published in the Saturday Times and Sunday Colonist.
3. It is not necessary for contestants to buy the Colonist or Times to enter the SUMMERFUNTHING contest. An exact drawing of the entry form printed in the Colonist or Times may be made on a plain piece of paper. Note: copies produced by any other process will not be accepted.
4. The SUMMERFUNTHING judges will have the final decision on any interpretation of Game rules.
5. As a condition of receiving prizes, recipients agree to allow publication of their names and pictures in the Colonist or Times for no additional consideration. Submission of an entry indicates acceptance of all rules. No prize substitutions.
6. The contest is open to all readers of the Daily Colonist and Victoria Times on Vancouver Island and the Gulf Islands. Employees of Victoria Press and their immediate families are not eligible to enter.
7. In fairness to all, the Colonist or Times cannot answer questions or respond to phone calls or letters regarding THE SUMMERFUNTHING CONTEST.
8. All winners will be determined by a random draw from all valid entries.

Ex-Jamaican's star shines

MONTREAL (CP) — Can Canada produce a reggae star to compete with giants like Bob Marley, Peter Tosh and Jimmy Cliff?

After thsee years of playing the nightclub circuit in Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal, Ernie Smith thinks "ohings are begininng to happen" for him.

Smith, a 35-year-old Jamaican who now makes his home in Toronto, is already considered Canada's most successful reggae artist, but remains virtually unknown outside a small circle of fans.

a'it takes a lot of time, expertise and perseverance" to make it in the music business, he said in an interview. "But things are starting to happen."

A dynamic and highly versatile performer, he plays a polished form of reggae that includes touches of rythym and blues, calypso, gospel, rock and pop.

Smith, who is scheduled to open for Peter Tosh at concerts in Montreal and Ottawa July 23-24, had already made his mark as a ballad singer and songwriter in Jamaica before he left the troubled island in 1976.

He began writing songs as a youngster after his father taught him how to play "three chords on a guitar," and his first recorded song, Tears on My Pillow, sold mmre than a million copies in Europe when it was recorded by Johnny Nash in 1973.

Smith recorded the song in 1967 while he was selling insurance in Jamaica: "I took a day off work to audition at a radio station in Kingston," he recalls in a voice that has only a hint of a Jamaican accent.

"I told them I had this song and after I played it for them they said I should wait for a band to come in to make a record. It almost happened too easy."

The single didn't do well, but Smith went on to produce five albums and 14 singles, many of which outsold Marley's recordings in the Caribbean. He has also written songs for other artists, including Marley's wife, Rita.

One of his songs, Life is Just For Living — originally recorded for a Red Stripe beer commercial — won Smith the top award for composer, singer and performer at the Tokyo Song Festival in 1972.

Last year, Smith and his back-up band, The Roots Revival, cut their first record in Canada on the independent Generation label, distributed by Canadian-based Boot Records.

To Behold Jah, described by one reviewer as one of the best reggae albums in years, contains eight solid tunes written or co-written by Smith which praise the traditional Rastafarian themes of Jah (God), freedom, and love.

Canadian TV threatened

By JAMES NELSON

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian television as a cultural force is seriously threatened and more determination and imagination is needed to preserve it, CBC President Al Johnson says in his annual report to Parliament.

"We want a television system that is clearly and confidently Canadian, that speaks to us of ourselves, and that is not overwhelmed by friendly but foreign voices," he writes in the report for the fiscal year which ended March 31.

Expenditures totalled $662 million, for which it received $447.4 million from the federal treasury and $123.7 million from advertisers.

Johnson repeated his often-stated call on the government to give the CBC a long-term assured budget plan so it will not be subject to fluctuations in the amounts voted by Parliament annually.

Last year, its projected operating budget was cut by $71 million, hurting the development of new programs.

Inflation and previously-negotiated wage agreements added $50 million to CBC costs, which could only be met by reducing some program services.

Johnson writes that the original structure of the broadcasting system, oriented towards Canadian services, and the economics of the broadcasting industry in this country are all being eroded. U.S. programs dominate the Canadian market through cable systems and the many privately-owned Canadian stations which import them.

"Amzrican programs occupy 75 per cent of the viewing time of English Canadians, and about 40 per cent of the viewing time of French Canadians," Johnson says.

"And Canadian producers and film makers are expected to produce comparable programs for less than half the budgets of their U.S. counterparts."

Johnson says a reawakening is needed to the importance of Canadian broadcasting to reflect Canadian life.

He says the CBC is heartened by rulings of the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission endorsing this view, as well as by the appointment of a committee in the secretary of state department to review national arts and culture policy and programs.

Johnson reviews the CRTC hearings on the use of satellite service for remote areas and the need — and expense — of regional programming for the Far North.

He restates the CBC position, urging caution in licensing pay-TV systems that would bring in "another influx of U.S. material, merely for entrepreneurial profit."

Substitute pianist miracle of talent

Ruth Laredo proved a brilliant replacement for ill artist

By AUDREY JOHNSON

The fluent keyboard artistry of renowned American pianist Ruth Laredo, who is making a brief stay with the Victoria International Festival, achieved a kind of miracle on Tuesday.

Programmed for the solo-chamber music concert at the McPherson was the Trio Rouvier-Kanterow-Muller performing one of the gems of chamber music literature, the Schubert Trio in B flat, Op. 99.

The ensemble from France, however, has temporarily lost its piano member, Jacques Rouvier, to illness. It seemed possible the Schubert work could not be performed but Miss Laredo knew the piano part and within hours had rehearsed it with Jean-Jacques Kanterow and Philippe Muller and was ready for Tuesday's concert.

The resultant performance was a remarkable feat of artistic communication, closely knit, richly expressive, vital.

The excellence of a pianist is not necessarily a guarantee that he or she can overnight fit precisely into such a situation. An ensemble of the quality of the French trio has developed and polished its composite perfections over months and years of working and playing together daily.

The miracle is that Ruth Laredo, an astonishing virtuoso soloist who last summer brought audiences to their feet time and again, was able almost instantaneously to match the character and qualities of the ensemble.

Bela Siki, a pianist who is known to Victoria audiences through appearances with the Victoria Symphony and last year's participation in the International Festival, contributed Chopin's Sonata in B flat minor to the program.

A sensitive and introspective artist, Siki invoked a soaring sense of majesty transcending sorrow in the familiar Marche Funebre movement, following it with a beautifully articulate and flowing presto.

In the opening movement, the sumptuous and expressive tone that is characteristic of his playing was present. Yet the mood at the outset was somehow missed. The performance here gave an impression of detachment, of an aloof almost fragmented consideration of life that seemed foreign to the over-riding emotional intensity of the work.

Violinist Dana Pomerants-Mazurkevich and Mitchell Andrews at the piano opened the program with an accomplished and moving performance of Chausson's lovely Poeme Op. 25. This was followed by the brilliant Joachim arrangment of Brahms' Hungarian Dance No. 1, played with so much panache and spirit that its brevity left one wishing that more of the dances had been programmed.

On Thursday the festival moves to the University Centre Auditorium where the second of the series of "concerti extravaganza" concerts with the Vctoria Symphony Summer Festival Orchestra will be presented.

Soloists will be flutist Kathryn Cernauskas playing a Pergolesi concerto; Siki in the Mozart A Major K 488, and the superb cellist from the trio, Philippe Muller, in the Saint-Saens Cello Concerto in A minor.

The conductor is Gervase de Peyer who will also direct the orchestra in a performance of Wagner's Siegfried Idyl.

Elmo band's last stand

The last concert performance of the Elmo Wiggett band before it disbands will be at the Jazz in the Park series tonight at 7 in the Cameron Bandshell in Beacon Hill Park.

If it rains, the concert will move to the Crystal Garden.

This week's performance is sponsored by Sam's Deli.

Next week Art Lande, a pianist from San Francisco, will perform.

Film makers flocking to B.C. leave money and free publicity

By LESLIE SHEPHERD

VANCOUVER (CP) — There's no business like show business for pumping money into a local economy and providing the area with free advertising.

In the last two years British Columbia has become one of the most popular North American locations for shooting feature and made-for-television movies and for receiving the spin-off dollars and publicity.

Last year 16 movies were shot in B.C. — more than anywhere but New York and California. Those films put more money into the province's economy than in any other location, except Los Angeles.

It is estimated that between 33 and 38 per cent of a film's budget is spent in the community where the film is being shot, says Sid Fancy, Vancouver's economic development officer. Last year film companies spent at least $33 million in his city alone on actors, technicians, hotels, restaurants, catering, carpenters, mobile homes and rental vehicles.

About $50 million was spent in the province as a whole when costs of moving actors and equipment to such remote communities as Stewart, on the border of the Alaska panhandle, for the adventure thriller Bear Island are taken into account.

This year those figures are expected to quadruple.

More than 25 films already have been shot or are scheduled for shooting in B.C. this year. Included are: Paramount-Red Stripe Films Inc.'s All Washed Up, the story of a New Wave rock band, with Vancouver substituting for Johnstown, Pa.; Never Cry Wolf, based on the novel of the same title by Farley Mowat, and Up River, a story of an American settler who fights a monopolistic mining company to homestead near the coastal community of Bella Bella.

It would be impossible to buy advertising equal to the amount of promotion and publicity Vancouver gained from these and other movies such as Kosygin is Coming, The Changeling, Letters From Frank and last fall's two-hour Love Boat special, says George Madden, executive assistant to the mayor.

Credit for B.C.'s success goes to Justis Greene, the province's film promotion officer, hired in 1978 to bring more pictures to B.C. Greene says that's not a difficult task.

"We don't claim to be the best place in the world to shoot pictures," he says. "We just find we can shoot more pictures for less money with the same visual impact."

B.C.'s proximity to Hollywood also works to the province's advantage.

"We are only two hours away from Hollywood so actors and film specialists can come and go without difficulty."

"Our lower dollar, as compared with the U.S. dollar, has also not hurt our efforts to encourage co-productions with U.S. citizens and companies."

Some films are attracted to B.C. because of the Canadian government's capital cost allowance which allows Canadian investors — individuals and corporations — to write off their costs, Greene says.

Vancouver now has an established professional technical core, permitting producers to hire local technicians and actors rather than import them.

Five years ago only 40 per cent of B.C. film crews were Canadian, while today that figure is closer to 75 or 85 per cent, says Greene.

Greene, a former lighting technician, disputes tales that unionized technicians charge producers an arm and a leg in B.C. and are about to kill the industry. Film union wages and benefits are significantly lower in Western Canada than they are in the East, he says.

"Basically, dollar for dollar, the same picture can be shot for less money in the West than it can in the East," he says.

"Of course, there are exceptions. I'm sure a Montreal-based producer can shoot a low-budget non-union picture cheaper in Montreal than in Vancouver, but that's just because he knows Montreal better."

Greene says it's a rare occasion when his office can't find a film company a suitable shooting location in B.C.'s northern fjords, interior deserts and ranches, coastal mountains and ethnic urban neighborhoods. When they don't get a film it's usually because the company decided to shoot where the story was originally set.

In response to a recent press release asking "How would you like to have Katherine Hepburn and Henry Fonda as house guests for this summer?" Greene's office received hundreds of calls from people offering the lakeshore mansion surrounded by deciduous trees that 20th Century Fox wanted for an adaptation of the Broadway play On Golden Pond.

They photographed 200 homes from Kalamalka Lake in the Okanagan to Cowichan Lake on Vancouver Island and the craggy shores of West Vancouver, but eventually lost out to a house in New Hampshire, the story's original setting.

However, during the search they found a large, Tudor-style house with expansive lawns on waterfrontage in a wealthy neighborhood, required for the made-for-TV thriller Babysitter, starring Quinn Cumming, William Shatner and Patty Duke Astin.

Another of the few films they missed was the adaptation of A Whale for the Killing. Although Greene's office spent 36 hours in a plane scouting for locations, discovered nine places that could be made to look like an East Coast village and shot more than 400 pictures, the producers decided to use the village Mowat had in mind when he wrote the story.

"We even took them to one location near Bamfield (on the west coast of Vancouver Island) and damn it if there weren't finwhales basking near the shore," says Greene.

LeBlanc threatens suit over Nechako

OTTAWA (CP) — Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc said Tuesday the federal government will take the Aluminum Co. of Canada to court if it thinks the company is endangering fish in the Nechako River of British Columbia.

LeBlanc was responding to New Democrat Jim Fulton, MP for Skeena, who charged the company says it will increase the flow in the river to only 850 cubic feet a second despite a government request to get it up to 1,000 cubic feet.

Pointing out the flow through the river Tuesday was only 800 cubic feet per second, Fulton urged LeBlanc to take action against the company under the Fisheries Act. The flow this year has been as low as 500 cubic feet a second.

The company uses water from the reservoir above the Kenney Dam on the river to provide hydroelectric power for its aluminum smelter at Kitimat.

It has been under fire from Fulton and groups in B.C. for plans to increase the size of the dam and to divert more water from the Nechako to increase its hydroelectric output.

Critics say reducing the flow in the river threatens salmon stocks and downriver water supply.

LeBlanc said Tuesday the 1,000-cubic-foot figure was set many years ago and department officials are watching the situation to see how much water is necessary to protect the fish.

"We have made it clear to the Aluminum Co. of Canada that if in our judgment . . . the flow was inadequate, then obviously we would go to court if necessary to make sure the resource is protected," he said.

Department officials had not yet requested further action but LeBlanc added: "If it is the opinion of scientists to request more water, then we will."

L.A. plum for B.C. architect

VANCOUVER (CP) — Arthur Erickson Architects of Vancouver has been awarded a contract as design architects for a $1-billion building complex in downtown Los Angeles which will house the city's new museum of modern art.

Erickson's company said in a news release Tuesday that Cadillac Fairview Corp. Ltd. of Toronto will sponsor 50 per cent of the project.

Along with Erickson, the Los Angeles-based companies of Gruen Associates and Kamnitzer Cotton Vreeland will act as design architects.

The project will be located in the Bunker Hill area of Los Angeles and will cover an eight-acre site. It will include three large office towers — two 38 stories and one 52 — with 3.3 million square feet of commercial office space, 750 residential units, a 450-room hotel with 50 extra rental apartments, 200,000 square feet of retail space and the new museum.

Erickson's work is expected to begin immediately.

Gravel-seeking birds run down on highway

HOPE (CP) — Hundreds of birds called grosbeaks are being killed by traffic in Manning Park on the Hope-Princeton highway. The birds are flocking to the highway to pick up gravel for their digestive systems.

Rig draws tourists

NANOOSE — The 360-foot tall multi-legged oil drilling rig Ocean Bounty has become a local tourist attraction in Nanoose Bay, where it's anchored for a multi-million dollar refit.

The rig, which had been working off Alaska, was towed in to Nanoose last week to be given a thorough overhaul before going on to its next drilling site in the North Sea.

Rail demolition

KELOWNA (CP) — CP Rail has begun demolition of part of the Kettle Valley railway line in the Okanagan Valley, says a spokesman for the group which wants to save the railway.

Brian Morris of the Kettle Valley Heritage Society said demolition is under way on 45 kilometres of the abandoned railway line near Penticton.

But a CP Rail spokesman said the work, which began July 2, did not include sections of the 90-kilometre line under a provincial government moratorium which expires July 21.

The society is trying to raise money to preserve a section of the historic line as a tourist attraction. CP Rail has offered to sell a section of the line for $500,000.

Charges reduced

KELOWNA (CP) — A doctor here now faces three counts of unlawfully prescribing a narcotic to two people who were not his patients following a court appearance Tuesday.

Dr. Thomas John O'Neil was first charged with three counts of trafficking in a narcotic following an RCMP investigation into medical prescriptions, but those charges were stayed and replaced with the less serious charges.

Area evacuated

REVELSTOKE (CP) — Residents of a two-block area of this city were evacuated Tuesday because of a propane gas leak. A CP Rail tank car on a siding adjacent to a propane plant started to leak the gas from the top valve, forcing the evacuation. No one was injured.

Request welcome

VANCOUVER (CP) — Teachers in British Columbia probably want their federation to remain a combination professional organization and trade union, says a federation executive.

B.C. Teachers' Federation vice-president Larry Kuehn said Tuesday the teachers' group welcomed a request by the B.C. School Trustees Association that Education Minister Brian Smith determine what kind of legislation should cover the BCTF.

"Teachers want to be able to bargain for working conditions," Kuehn said in a prepared statement.

Cherry loss likely a record

KELOWNA (CP) — The B.C. crop insurance branch likely will settle a record number of claims for weather-related damage to the 1980 cherry crop, the Okanagan Valley crop insurance director said Tuesday.

Peter Humphry-Baker said the loss would likely exceed the previous record of $504,000 in 1978 and would probably eliminate a $250,000 surplus from the 1979 insurance program begun in 1967.

The Okanagan Valley crop insurance branch has underwritten $2.4 million in cherries this year. Forty per cent of the 1,119 insured fruit growers in the valley produce cherries.

IOC selects Spanish boss

MOSCOW (AP) — Juan Antonio Samaranch of Spain was elected president today of the International Olympic Committee (IOC.) He will succeed Lord Killanin of Ireland when the flame goes out at the end of the Moscow Games and will serve for eight years.

Samaranch, who will be 60 Thursday, won a clear majority on the first ballot of the IOC election. It was believed 75 of the IOC's 85 members were present.

There were four other candidates — James Worrall of Toronto, Willi Daume of West Germany, Marc Hodler of Switzerland and Lance Cross of New Zealand.

According to IOC traditions, the voting was secret and no figures were released.

Samaranch, an industrialist and former president of the Barcelona city parliament, has been Spanish ambassador in Moscow since 1977.

He was elected to the IOC in 1966 and almost immediately began playing an important role in the running of the Olympic movement.

Since 1968, with one short interval, he has been the IOC's chief of protocol, arranging meetings and ceremonies.

Although the opening ceremonies for the Games are still three days away, it's the closing ceremonies that already have angered the United States because of the International Olympic Committee's decision to raise the U.S. flag at those festivities Aug. 3.

Monique Berlioux, director of the IOC, told a news conference Tuesday that Olympic protocol requires ending the Games by raising the flag of the next host country. The 1984 Summer Games are scheduled to be held in Los Angeles.

Peter Ueberroth, general manager of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, who was to update the IOC today on the preparations by Los Angeles for the 1984 Games, said the decision to raise the Stars and Stripes was strictly an IOC matter.

"That's an IOC ceremony," Ueberroth said. "We're not part of that decision."

At President Carter's Georgia vacation retreat, presidential spokesman Jody Powell said: "If they do that, it will be against the wishes of the American government."

Meanwhile, athletes and visitors continue to arrive. Forty members from an expected French delgation of 130 athletes arrived Tuesday. The French team, along with several other western European delegations, will not participate in the opening ceremonies in protest of the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan. In all, almost 6,000 athletes and 2,000 team officials were housed in the Olympic Village.

Among the many journalists on hand, the major topics of conversation were the weather and security — things they can do nothing about except complain.

The weather, cloudy with a cold chill in the air, was more typical of the kind that greets the American football season. The Russians call it horseradish weather.

The Russian weather station's chief said cloud-seeding techniques were not sophisticated enough to turn the skies sunny.

However, reporters are finding the Russians' security highly sophisticated. Metal detection devices are at the entrances to all Olympic areas, causing some long lines and numerous delays. Generally, the officials manning the electronic equipment were cordial and gracious about the constant checks.

A veteran Russian commentator criticized western reporters for their complaints about security measures. Spartak Beglov, writing in the semi-official Soviet news agency Novosti, said: "What has become a norm, acceptable to everyone in other countries, is unacceptable for certain western maligners only because it takes place in Moscow."

He quoted one foreign journalist as telling him: "Better to let them check me five times than allow what happened in Munich to happen here." Arab terrorists killed 11 members of the Israeli team at the 1972 Summer Games.

Beglov also charged that the Western press is attempting to envelop the Moscow Games in a cloud of misinformation.

"As the last paroxysms of the sponsors of the inglorious boycott subside, Western adepts of lies and insinuations take over from them," he wrote.

Tass, the Soviet news agency, also criticized the U.S. for sponsoring a track and field meet in Philadelphia beginning today.

"Irrespective of the results produced at the Philadelphia contests, they will in no way overshadow the international Olympic festival in the Soviet capital," Tass said.

The look of gods on Daley's side

LONDON — Daley Thompson bounced down the pole-vault runway, drove the fiberglass pole into the box and cleared the crossbar on his last attempt at the height.

"He's very single-minded," Doreen Rayment said as her nephew, the Briton considered most likely to succeed Bruce Jenner as Olympic decathlon champion in the Summer Games in Moscow, grinned at her from the pit. "He's got to be a winner. Even if I beat him at cards, he would get upset. We used to play Scrabble and card games before he started beating me in cards. We're still playing Scrabble because he hasn't beaten me yet."

The afternoon was chilly and windy at West London Stadium, not a day most world-class athletes would relish as a final Olympic tuneup. But Thompson seemed oblivious to the weather, playfully bantering with the pole-vault judge and friends, changing shoes every so often as he moved through six events and encouraging his clubmates on the Essex Beagles.

Last Friday, Thompson ran 100- and 200-meter races in Wales and then drove home for the British Athletics League meet the next day, in which he won the 100, finished second in the pole vault and high hurdles, put the shot and ran on two victorious relays, doing a 47-second leg in the meet-ending 1,600 that brought Essex the team title.

"He's got the look of the gods on his side," said Geoff Whaley, a hammer-thrower and team-mate, after Thompson had outsprinted Glen Cohen, the former Boston University quartermiler, on the anchor leg of the 400 relay. "He's very free and easy. He doesn't tighten up. How many guys do you know who do five or six events, joke their way and still win?"

The 21-year-old Thompson competed at the Montreal Olympics and finished a distant 18th with 7,905 points. It was only his sixth decathlon. He improved to 8,467 in taking the Commonwealth title two years ago and then broke Jenner's 8,617 mark on May 17 in Austria by scoring 8,622, the youngest world record-holder in the event since Rafer Johnson 25 years ago. Guido Kratschmer of West Germany, which is boycotting the Games, scored 8,649 last month.

Thompson's speed gives him an early advantage. Unlike many decathletes who seldom compete in open events, he enters only a few decathlons each year.

Keeping cool in an event that often consumes 10 hours over two days may be more of an attribute than Thompson's natural speed. He has also learned restraint.

After Thompson won the 100 last Saturday in 11.1 seconds, without the aid of starting blocks and fighting a stiff wind, a rival coach chided him by saying, "Well done, Daley; a classical 11.1."

"It could have been 10.1 if I was going the other way," Thompson shot back, jogging down the track. He has done 10.45 at the distance.

Despite a seemingly casual attitude, Thompson values time and place. Last Saturday, he turned down repeated attempts to be interviewed by a British television crew that had shown up unannounced at the meet to film him as part of a pre-Olympic documentary. However, he allowed an American newsman to follow him around during the four-hour meet because the reporter had phoned and set up the session in advance.

There is a Thompson nobody knows, Mrs. Rayment said of the athlete described by the British press as bold and brash. She described him as a person who enjoys relaxing at home, an "avid reader" who saves Athletics Weekly magazines the way American track statisticians store back copies of Track and Field News. He is a far cry, she says, from the troubled black teen-ager who moved into the Rayment household in Worcester Park, Surrey, six years ago, insecure and uncertain about where he was going.

Thompson's Nigerian-born father died when he was 12. His mother, who is Scottish, consented to allow him to live with his aunt, after mother and son had disagreed over the merits of pursuing a track and field career full time.

Mrs. Rayment will be going to Moscow Friday morning. With the absence of Kratschmer, the world record-holder, the 6-foot-1-inch, 185-pound Thompson is the favorite in the 10-event competition.

Blues drop verdict

Home is not exactly a happy place for Victoria Blues.

Owning nine victories in 15 road games in their Northwest Baseball League chores, the Blues have managed only four victories in 10 home contests.

The latest setback at Royal Athletic Park arrived Tuesday night when the Victorians were clipped 6-2 by Medford A's, the club that dropped three straight contests to the Blues at Medford last week.

Medford righthander collected his first pitching victory of the season as he held the Blues to four hits in just over six innings before being relieved by lefty Bill Krueger.

Lemmerman sparks Ticats

Times News Services

Quarterback Bruce Lemmerman directed an explosive offence that gave Hamilton Tiger-Cats a 35-0 lead early in the second quarter en route to a 41-23 mauling of Ottawa Rough Riders Tuesday night.

Meanwhile, Montreal Alouettes, the defending Eastern Conference champions, lost their second straight game, this time 19-8 to Calgary Stampeders.

Said running back Ronnie Rowland, who scored three touchdowns from 15, one and two yards out in the first quarter for Hamilton in the Ticats' first regular-season game:

"I had good first quarter like that in high school, but this is the pro ranks and this is the best I've done in so far. I'm looking for better things to come."

The victory also demonstrated that Lemmerman is still one of the premium quarterbacks in the CFL.

Lemmerman, acquired by Hamilton in an off-season trade with Edmonton Eskimos, said the last league game he started was the 1977 Grey Cup, when Eskimos lost 41-6 to Montreal.

"They gave me time to find the receiver," said Lemmerman.

"We had some great runs by our backs. A lot of times the blocks weren't there and they just made it on their own."

After Rowland's brilliant first quarter, the Ticats added two more TDs — an eight-yard pass to wide receiver Leif Pettersen and Rufus Crawford's 94-yard return of a Gerry Organ punt — before the Rough Riders got on the scoreboard, when quarterback Conredge Holloway threw a 48-yard touchdown pass to Mike Murphy at 3:38 of the second quarter.

Bernie Ruoff converted all five Hamilton touchdowns and added field goals of 35 and 42 yards in the fourth quarter. Holloway threw two other touchdowns — 62 yards to ex-Ticat Jim Reid and 17 yards to Gary Cook in the third quarter. Organ kicked three converts and added singles of 47 and 88 yards.

In Calgary, veteran running back James Sykes was the major offensive weapon of the Stampeders, especially in the second half when the Calgary offence got on track. He ran 19 times for 138 yards and caught nine passes for 86 and scored Calgary's only offensive touchdown, a one-yard run at 11:41 of the third quarter.

Calgary's other touchdown was scored by John Palazeti, who intercepted a pass from Montreal quarterback Joe Barnes and returned it 57 yards early in the second quarter. J. T. Hay converted both and added a 42-yard field goal and a 54-yard single. Punter Mike McTague completed the Calgary scoring with a 56-yard single.

Alvin Walker, acquired recently from Saskatchewan Rmughriders, scored the only Montreal touchdown, a one-yard run in the second quarter at the end of an 11-play, 72-yard march. Don Sweet converted the touchdown and kicked a 50-yard single.

For Ardell Wiegandt, Calgary's rookie coach, it was his first CFL regular-season victory. The Stampeders lost to Ottawa 26-20 last week.

Canadians too good for world boxla foes

The Nations in 1980 world box lacrosse championship moves into semi-final action at Coquitlam tonight with Canada East (Brooklin) meeting the North American Native Warriors for the right to meet Canada West (Coquitlam) in the gold medal game.

The final will be played at Vancouver's Pacific Coliseum Thursday at 8 p.m.

Tuesday Canadian teams scored a double.

Ron McCoy scored seven goals as Canada East humiliated Australia 20-7 before about 500 fans at Memorial Arena while Canada West easily handled the United States 18-7 before 2,100 fans at New Westminster.

Canada West was the only team to go through the round-robin tournament undefeated, winning four games. Canada East finished with a 3-1 record, the Warriors 2-2, United States 1-3 and Australia 0-4.

Ken Colley had four goals for Canada East, which held period leads of 8-0 and 17-3 and led 13-0 before the injury-racked Australians scored their first goal.

Dave Wright and Larry Graham each scored a pair and Tim Briscoe, Brian Colm, Steve Wilde, John Dalgleish and Tom Wreggitt scored once each for the Canada East.

Wayne Little led the Australians with three goals. Peter Mathwin had a pair and Kevin Humphries and Dave Mildrew also scored.

Gord Quilty, Tim Kelly and Randy Bryan each scored three goals for Canada West. Dave Cochrane and Gary Lindsay had two with singles going to Mike Reelie, Dan Wilson, Mark Valastin, Kevin Parsons and Wayne McAuley.

For the Americans, Joe Taylor had three goals. Norm Smith scored twice, while Mickey Menna and Stu Curran added singles.

Earlier it was announced that Jim Branton of Canada East had been suspended for the balance of the championship by the executive committee.

Branton apparently was involved in an incident with referee Harry Woolley near the end of a game Monday in North Vancouver won 19-18 by Canada East over North American Native Warriors.

"The tournament chairman (Malcolm Ashford) and the executive committee today reviewed the situation and decided to suspend the Brooklin player," said a tournament spokesman. "They did so after considering the referee's report, discussions with various people involved, plus a look at video tapes."

Both teams complained about the officiating of Woolley and coach Tony Gray of Brooklin threatened to pull his team out of the tournament if Woolley officiated another of the Redmen's games.

Ovett equals world record

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Briton Steve Ovett has equalled the world record for 1,500 metres but he will not hold it any longer than next May 1.

And he may have owned the record by himself were it not for a brief wave to the crowd.

Next May 1, under new rules of the International Amateur Athletic Federation, the world governing body for track and field, records in races of all distances will be carried out to hundredths of seconds. The rule currently applies only to races 400 metres or less. But when the new rule is instituted, it will become retroactive.

Therefore, Ovett's current official time of three minutes, 32.1 seconds, recorded Tuesday night at Bislett Stadium, will revert to 3:32.09.

Sebastian Coe, his countryman and arch-rival, again will become the sole record holder with a time of 3:32.03 registered at Zurich, Switzerland, last Aug. 15. Coe's time currently also is listed as 3:32.1.

Ovett's record-tying performance adds even more intrigue to the upcoming Olympic Games in Moscow, where he and Coe are scheduled to meet in the 1,500 for the first time.

The two never have liked each other and Ovett has been determined to wipe Coe's name from the record book. He did it July 1 at Bislett, breaking Coe's world mile mark of 3:49.0 with a clocking of 3:48.8.

He almost did it again Tuesday night.

Only a wave to the crowd, with about 40-50 metres remaining — when he had the race won — cost him sole possession of the mark.

Two Canadian javelin throwers finished atop a field of nine.

John Corraza, 26, of Hull, Que., earned his third straight victory in the event, followed closely by Phil Olsen, 23, of Nanaimo.

Corraza, who finished first in previous meets in Stuttgart, West Germany, and London, had a throw of 84.34 metres, the best of his career.

Olsen, competing with torn cartilage in his left knee, said the knee is heavily taped and caused him balance problems.

"My attitude has been low and I wanted to get out of it," he said. "Tonight, I thought we pulled it out real well."

The best finish out of five other Canadians competing here was a third by Anne Mackie-Morelli of Vancouver in the women's 800 metres.

Swim records tumble

TORONTO (CP) — Canadian records took a beating Tuesday night, with Graham Welbourn of Vancouver, Carol Klimpel of Toronto and Cameron Henning of Edmonton directing the assault at the national swimming championships.

Welbourn, 19, broke the Canadian and Commonwealth records in the men's 50-metre freestyle with a sizzling time of 23.69 seconds in the final.

The speedy Welbourn, born in Calgary, tied the Canadian and Commonwealth records earlier in the day while winning his heat in 23.75. In the final, he led all the way to better the records, also held by Gary MacDonald of Vancouver.

Bill Sawchuk of Thunder Bay, Ont., placed second with a time of 23.93, followed by Peter Szmidt of Edmonton in 24.18.

In the women's 50-metre freestyle, Klimpel, 17, won the final in 26.25 to better the Canadian and Commonwealth records of 26.35, set earlier this year by Anne Jardin of Pointe Claire, Que.

Jardin wound up second with a clocking of 26.68, while Pam Rai of New Westminster was third in 27.11. Rai, 14, set a national age-class record for the 13-14-year-old group.

Welbourn's and Klimpel's performances came during the opening night of the championships, which will also decide Canada's honorary Olympic team. The Esso Cup competition ends Saturday night when Canada's team will be selected to compete in four international meets during the summer, replacing the Olympic Games in Moscow.

Henning took away a Canadian record from Bruce Berger of New Westminster with an impressive showing in the 200-metre backstroke.

Berger, 18, only held the record for a few hours, with a winning effort in a heat earlier in the day, two minutes 04.93 seconds to better the previous standard of 2:05.09.

Berger's performance in the heat broke the record set earlier this year by Wade Flemons of Vancouver.

But along came Henning in the final at the Etobicoke Olympium and he covered the distance in 2:03.45 to beat runner-up Flemons, who finished in 2:03.94. Berger was third in 2:04.07.

Some handy checks decrease fuel costs

It might be apropos as news drifts in from eastern Canada of another rise in gasoline prices, for a few tips on fuel economy for boaters and fishermen.

Some of the suggestions, which were passed along by the Allied Boating Association of Canada, might seem insignificant. But, taken together, they could result in substantial fuel savings.

● Make sure boat and motor are matched. The difference between having a boat and motor properly matched and one not properly rigged can be as much as five miles per hour. In terms of fuel efficiency, it could mean the same performance on 10 to 20 per cent less fuel.

● Check the propeller for damage. A bent, nicked or improper prop will decrease efficiency.

● Don't idle your motor unnecessarily. It wastes time and fuel and warmup time isn't necessary in modern outboards.

● Make sure your motor is as high as possible on the transom — but short of the point where the prop breaks water and cavitates on sharp turns or steering is impaired. Remember more fuel is used when the motor is mounted low in the water.

● The angle of your outboard motor must also be adjusted for top performance.

● Passengers and gear should be arranged so the boat rides at its optimum angle.

● Make sure your hull is clean. A buildup of marine growth can cut speed considerably and result in an increase of up to 40 per cent in drag.

● If you're going somewhere fast, get the boat up to planing speed as fast as possible. The least efficient throttle setting is the speed at which the boat is trying to "climb over the hump" and get on plane.

● And, lastly, make sure the motor itself is tuned up to operate at peak efficiency.

Rob Waters, the manager at Pedder Bay Marina, insists he knows better.

But in the heat of the moment . . .

Rob has been taking a friend, Doug Holpdy of Edmonton, fishing for 12 years each summer without success.

Then, recently, Doug tied into a chinook that witnesses say weighed around 20 pounds.

When he finally got it to the side of the boat Rob was there in quick order with the net.

Unfortunately, he tried to net the fish tail-first, leaving Doug with only a memory of a classical one that got away.

Maybe next year . . .

This is just a personal observation . . . nothing more and nothing less.

There is a distinct and growing trend among conservationists — including some in the provincial government service — toward consideration of radical solutions.

And, who can really blame them. Frustration has taken its toll and moulded current attitudes.

Many of these people felt in the past that solutions could be found by rational compromise when it came to a question of industry vs. environment. They supported the idea of public input only to see their words fall by the wayside when it came time for action.

It is increasingly apparent that all "compromises" inevitably swing to the advantage of industry at the expense of the environment — especially in the latter few years under our business-oriented Socred regime.

Too bad civil disobedience is deemed necessary to protect what the Socreds ironically tagged Super Natural British Columbia.

It's Martina vs. Marjorie today

MONTREAL (CP) — Local tennis fans caught their first closeup glipse of Martina Navratilova Tuesday, and the two-time Wimbledon champion showed them why she is considered the premiere player in the game today.

Matched against Candy Reynolds of Knoxville, Tenn., the 23-year-old top-seeded Navratilova took less than 90 minutes to come away with an effortless 6-1, 6-3 victory at the $100,000 Player's Challenge women's tennis tournament at Jarry Park.

In other action Tuesday, eighth-seed Anne Smith of Dallas, won easily, 6-1, 6-1, over Duk Hee Lee of Seoul; fifth-seed Ann Kiyomura of San Mateo, Calif., downed Sherry Acker of Kalamazoo, Mich., 6-3, 6-4; Jodi Appelbaum of Miami, Fla., came back from a 6-4 first-set loss to defeat Susy Jaeger of Lincolnshire, Ill., 6-4 6-4, in the final sets, and Betsy Nagelsen of Winnetka, Ill., rebounded from a first-set setback to beat Paula Smith of Boulder, Colo., 4-6, 6-2, 6-3.

Navratilova's next opponent is Marjorie Blackwood of Ottawa, the top-ranked player in the country, who she meets in the second round today.

Hrabosky's duster provokes hot Mets

Times News Services

The New York Mets are red hot and Lee Mazzilli didn't like what happened one bit. He was hotter.

"Throwing at heads is not baseball," Mazzilli said Tuesday night after he provoked the second of two ninth-inning bench-clearing incidents with a verbal taunt of Atlanta reliever Al Hrabosky in New York Mets' 9-2 National League victory over the Braves.

Mazzilli, angered by a Hrabosky pitch over the head of New York pitcher Pat Zachry that triggered the first bench clearing, retaliated immediately — drilling a two-run homer over the left field fence.

As Mazzilli was completing his home run trot, he looked toward the mound and told Hrabosky — "How'd you like that? Don't be throwing at my pitcher."

Hrabosky slammed his glove to the ground and charged toward the plate just as he had moments before when Zachry was attempting to bunt.

Both Hrabosky moves brought players from both squads spilling onto the field.

No punches were thrown and there were no ejections.

In other NL games, Cincinnati Reds downed Montreal Expos 11-7, Los Angeles Dodgers beat Chicago Cubs 6-2, Pittsburgh Pirates defeated San Francisco Giants 5-2, St. Louis Cardinals edged San Diego Padres 5-3 and Houston Astros nipped Philadelphia Philies 3-2.

Zachry, who pitched a six-hitter and fanned eight in lifting his record to 4-5, said he didn't say anything to Hrabosky after the over-the-head pitch.

"I looked out like, 'What's going on?' " Zachry said. "He (Hrabosky) said, 'What are you bunting for?'

"I said I'm supposed to."

The Mets, who brought their record to the .500 level this late in a season for the first time in four years and closed to within four games of the lead, had the game in control after Steve Henderson belted a three-run homer in the first inning and a solo shot, his fourth of the year, in the sixth.

It was the Mets' 15th victory in the last 22 games and lifted their record to 42-42, the best since a 61-61 mark on Aug. 19, 1976.

Johnny Bench added another item in a long list of baseball accomplishments by breaking the career home run mark for a catcher. He slammed home run No. 314 as a catcher as Cincinnati outslugged Montreal. The homer lifted him past Yogi Berra, the former New York Yankee, on the all-time list for catchers.

Helmet hits female fan

NEW YORK (AP) — A female fan at Yankee Stadium was struck in the face by a batting helmet angrily thrown into the stands by Minnesota Twins outfielder Bombo Rivera during the American League baseball game Tuesday night with New York, stadium officials said.

Officials said Shirley Mellen of Roselle, N.J., was struck above the right eye and on the bridge of her nose by the helmet and suffered facial cuts.

Oak Bay's late rally overcomes Sidney

Oak Bay went on a five-run fifth-inning scoring spree to snatch a come-from-behind 10-8 win over Sidney Tuesday night in the Greater Victoria Little League baseball playoffs at Lambrick Park.

The Oak Bay comeback was sparked by catcher Derek Crawley who cracked a two-run double.

In Tuesday's other games, Triangle defeated Lakehill 7-3 at Hollywood Park and Layritz beat National 12-4 at Hillside Park.

Triangle got a big hit — a two-run double in the third inning from Chris Barteau — just when the team needed it.

For Layritz, Don Sheldrick had two hits and drove in three runs and Jack Lomax had three hits and drove in two.

Tonight at 6:30, it's Gordon Head against Central Saanich at Lambrick Park, Hampton versus Beacon Hill at Hollywood Park and Esquimalt against American at Hillside Park.

Austrian side coming

The Lower-Island Under-16 Selects are training hard for two games next week against a visiting crack Austrian youth soccer team.

The Austrians from Innsbruck play the Selects at Royal Athletic Park at 7 p.m. next Thursday and then the two teams clash again at 2 p.m. Saturday, July 26, at the Juan de Fuca Recreation Centre field.

Impressive soccer has been played so far by the Lower Island boys who have already beaten a visiting Scottish youth side 2-1 and a team from Edmonton 5-1 and are hoping for a good crowd particularly for the Thursday game to raise funds toward a planned 1981 tour of Britain.

Lumber club trips juniors

Raw hitting power overcame base-running dexterity Tuesday as Lumberworld of the Victoria Cosmopolitan Senior League tripped Victoria Merchants of the Pacific Junior League 6-5 in an interlocking baseball game at Lambrick Park.

Rick Shenton, who pitched the victory, cracked a triple and two singles to score twice and drive in one run while Ken Ball had three hits in four trips to the plate and drove in a run.

Merchants, who were outhit 11-5, managed to steal nine bases — including a steal home by Paul Hrach — and scored twice on passed balls.

Royal Oak aided by errors

Royal Oak Inn capitalized on nine errors by Seaspray Properties Tuesday night to score a 6-2 Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League victory at Central Park.

Only three of the Royal Oak runs were earned with Bill Pearce, Rick Sutter and winning pitcher Al Strandlund contributing two hits each and Steve Webb driving in two of the runs with a fifth-inning single.

At Heywood Avenue Park, Barry Moen hit a homer and drove in another run to lead Mears Realty to a 5-0 win over Strathcona Hotel in Heywood Men's League action.

Winning pitcher Dave Green struck out five batters.

In the Victoria-Saanich Women's League, Bemister's Welding moved into first place ahead of Island Dryco Breakers by defeating Strathcona Stingers, 5-1. The victory boosted pitcher Marilyn Bolton's record to 12-2.

Butler Brothers nipped Tillicum Shoppers Drug Mart 5-4 in the other game with Gina Olson picking up the win.

Prairie Inn hammered Lakehill Meats 18-7 and Allman's Joy trounced Safeway 16-8 in one-sided contests in the Lower Island Association intermediate "B" women's league.

And in Macdonald Park Men's League play, Lorne King hit a home run as Trafalgar Legion beat Mega Power 7-1 and Coast Projects downed Labatts 5-3 at Macdonald Park.

Canadians extend victory streak

TACOMA, Wash. (CP) — Eugene McWillie fanned 15 batters and allowed only five hits as Team Canada blanked Mexico 5-0 in a set-to of unbeaten teams at the world men's softball championships Tuesday.

With the victory, Canada remained tied with New Zealand for first place in the Group B standings, each with 4-0 records. Mexico has a 3-1 record and Taiwan is in fourth place with two wins and three losses. Top four teams in the A and B groups advance to the championship round.

Greg Dick clubbed a three-run homer for Canada in the fourth inning. In the fifth, Bob Peterson tripled in a run and then scored on Bob Stuart's single.

In other play Tuesday, the Bahamas, behind the hitting of Roy Rogers and John Rolle, beat South Africa 5-2 to share top spot in Group A standings with the United States with 4-0

Rolle had a triple and a double to drive in one run. Rogers had three hits, including a pair of doubles, in three trips, scoring two runs.

Japan was a 2-0 winner over Dominican Republic behind Masuhiro Yamamoto's one-hitter. Yamamoto struck out six. Seiiche Tanaka collected two of Japan's four hits. Japan and Dominican Republic have identical 2-2 records in the A group, while Guam is 2-3 after nipping the Virgin Islands 4-3.

Taiwan defeated Argentina 7-1 and Panama downed Papua-New Guinea 13-1.

Arsenault brings in three

Driver Ernie Arsenault set the pace at Sandown Tuesday as favorites more or less had their day and four new lifetime bests were hung up on the board.

Arsenault had three winners including the biggest payoff of the night and the only one in double figures.

Rebel John came from downtown in the stretch in the third to nip Battle Chips at the wire and return a healthy $58.30 and combine with Battle Chips for an Exactor of $120.50, tops for the evening. Otherwise, prices were modest.

Arsenault's other wins came with Jimi Jude ($6.80) in the sixth and Maple Winnie ($8.70) in the eighth. For Maple Winnie it was a new lifetime best time of 2:04.

Tobies Fort, driven by Leonard Hill, captured the featured ninth, barely holding off the closing rush of favored Pegassus Ernie and returning $9.00.

The time of 2:03.3 was also a lifetime best for Tobies Fort.

The other new best marks were set by Ensign Win ($6.90) in the second and Duane Relda ($6.60) in the fourth.

Driver Keith Quinlan recorded two victories with Duane Relda and Titanette ($4.10) in the fifth.

The Triactor of Captain Ucody N, Nova Rose and Bangor Scott returned $176.50

Racing resumes Thursday.

Dorothy gets medal with last-hole birdie

Dorothy DeGirolamo has a flair for dramatic finishes.

DeGirolamo matched her opening-round, four-over-par 78 for a 156 total Tuesday to capture medal laurels in the Pacific Northwest Golf Association women's championship tournament at Uplands Golf Club.

And she did it by sinking a six-foot putt on the final 196-yard, par-three ninth hole to edge Diane Phillips of the host club by one stroke.

The five-time Victoria champion, playing in her first Pacific Northwest championship, also collected a birdie deuce on the 17th hole and a birdie four on the 18th after starting on the 10th tee.

Her tee shot on the ninth landed at the edge of the green and the ball rolled by the hole. Knowing she needed to sink the putt to beat Phillips, who had finished about an hour earlier with a 77 for a 157 total, DeGirolamo took her time carefully lining up the shot and then stepped up and firmly tapped it home.

Kelly Antolock of Port Angeles shot a 78 and finished in a tie with Phillips.

Val Westell of Vancouver tied for the low round of the day at 76 and took fourth place with 158 while first-round leader Liz Culver of Median, Wash., shot 82 for 159 and fifth place.

Pat Derry of Royal Colwood was the only other Victoria player to qualify for championship match play starting today after firing a final-round 80 for 162.

Ellis takes men's medal honors

Jeff Ellis burned up the course with a sub-par effort for the second straight day Tuesday to capture medal honors in the Pacific Northwest Golf Association men's championship tournament at Royal Colwood Golf and Country Club.

The 27-year-old from Whidby Island fired a one-under-par 69 Tuesday to finish with a 137 total, four strokes ahead of runner-up Tom Rippon of Capilano Golf Club in West Vancouver.

Rippon shot a final-round 72 for a 141 total while Tom Kane of Rainier, Wash., matched the leader's 69 and finished in a tie for third at 144 with Steve Berry of Vancouver's Marine Drive, who fired a final round of 70.

Ellis was particularly sharp on the front nine, taking seven pars while posting birdies on the 359-yard, par-four second hole and the 506-yard, par-five fifth.

On the way back, he went one over par with bogeys on the 223-yard, par-three 11th and the 375-yard, par-four 17th while birdying the 337-yard, par-four 13th.

The low 32 qualifiers were scheduled to start championship match play today.

Ken Floyd of the host club proved the best out of 13 Vancouver Islanders making the cut with a final-round 73 for 147.

Lanny Sawchuck of Uplands, blew to a 79 after firing a 70 in the opening round on Monday and finished in a tie at 149 with Dave Donaldson of Gorge Vale, Don Gowan of Glen Meadows, Laurie Kerr of Royal Colwood and provincial champion Sandy Harper of Nanaimo.

Three golfers tied for the final championship berth at 153 but Dave Emery of Vancouver's Point Grey made the grade in a playoff against Kenn Morgan of Mission and Robin Steffanick of Gorge Vale.

Ray Plopper of Spokane carded a hole-in-one on the 11th but failed to make the cut.

In the seniors (40 and over) competition, Ken McLennan of Peninsula Golf Club near Everett shot a 74 for 145 and a nine-stroke margin over Dick Booth of Eugene.

Bruce Pelmore of Royal Colwood, the B.C. seniors champion, was the lowest Islander at 155 while clubmate Emery Wondra with 159 amd Brian Sluggett of Glen Meadows at 160 were the only other Islanders to advance with the top 16.

Wells has junior lead

SQUAMISH (CP) — Casey Wells of Coquitlam shot a five-under-par 67 to take the lead after one round of the 72-hole British Columbia Junior Men's Golf championship Tuesday at Squamish Valley Golf and Country Club.

Three strokes behind the 17-year-old leader at 70 were Rick Williams of Cowichan and Glenn Bannister of Abbotsford.

Six golfers shot one-under-par 71s — Radd Lukas of Olympia, Wash., Glenn Heuser of Kelowna, Greg Bismeyer of Vancouver, Grant Barnes of Kelowna, Brian Smythe of Vancouver and Jamie Harper of Nanaimo, younger brother of B.C. amateur champion Sandy Harper and last year's junior men's champion, Ian Harper.

Another stroke back at even-par 72 were Neil O'Leary of Victoria, Rob Pashich of Enumclaw, Wash., and Rick Gibson and Charles King, both of Vancouver.

GM begins layoffs as trade deficit hits

OSHAWA, Ont. (CP) — General Motors of Canada Ltd. has laid off 180 salaried employees, half of them employed in Oshawa, and granted early retirement to 260.

GM spokesman Nick Hall said Tuesday the layoffs are part of a plan announced by GM in Detroit in April to reduce the corporation's world-wide salaried staff of 180,000 by 10 per cent, as well as cutting costs.

Hall says the layoffs in Canada were kept to a minimum through early retirements and normal attrition. He added the laid-off workers could be called back if business improves.

Meanwhile, in Ottawa, Statistics Canada has reported that Canada's trade in automotive products with the United States worsened in the first three months compared with the same period a year ago as Canada imported $450 million more than it exported.

Exports dropped 25 per cent to $2.6 billion as passenger car sales fell 17 per cent and truck sales to the U.S. plunged 28 per cent in the first quarter.

Exports dropped 25 per cent to $2.6 billion as passenger car sales fell 17 per cent and truck sales to the U.S. plunged 28 per cent in the first quarter.

Imports slowed less sharply, by 20 per cent, as passenger car imports actually increased 13 per cent but truck imports fell 38 per cent.

The deficit on automotive parts, the major source of concern in Canada-U.S. auto trade, was pared to $905 million in the first quarter from $1.1 billion a year earlier. The smaller deficit occurred because the value of imported parts declined more than the value of exported parts.

Canada's trade deficit with other countries nearly doubled to $160 million from $85 million.

Prisoners' settle suit for prison of choice

OTTAWA (CP) — Six of the eight prisoners suing the federal government for what they say are arbitrary prison transfers have made a deal with officials to get the peniteniary of their choice, their lawyer said Tuesday.

Montreal lawyer Claude Lanctot said the eight were given the choice of two penitenitaries by the correctional service and six accepted.

"The other two were also offered choices — one is deciding, the other refused," said Lanctot.

One of the prisoners said he has been moved five times in the last six months.

Drapeau to head Union Nationale?

QUEBEC (CP) — Montreal Mayor Jean Drapeau is one of two top prospects for the vacant leadership of the Union Nationale, party president Serge Fontaine said Tuesday.

Fontaine said he received "a sympathetic response" when he spoke to Drapeau while looking for a successor to former leader Rodrigue Biron.

Biron bolted the party earlier this year to campaign for a yes vote in the referendum. Of the 11 UN members elected to the Quebec national assembly in 1976, only five remain.

Fontaine said the report of the provincial government's Malouf commission — which named Drapeau as the main culprit for the $1.6-million deficit of the 1976 Summer Olympic Games — would not discredit the mayor as a candidate.

Although the report was highly critical of Drapeau, Fontaine he said, it did not question his honesty.

BCRIC plan good for Heritage Fund

VANCOUVER (CP) — The current dispute over oil pricing could be resolved if Alberta's $6-billion Heritage Fund was transformed into a private operation similar to the B.C. Resources Investment Corp., says the Fraser Institute.

The Institute analysis said the BCRIC strategy had merit and that "The current debate about the federal government's share of resource revenues would not have arisen if the people of Alberta really owned the revenue from Alberta's oil," said Dr. Michael Walker.

"For example, if individual Albertans actually received their share in the form of dividends from a privatized Heritage Fund, the federal government would receive its usual share via income and capital gains taxes."

4,000 poised for a peek at the future

By
CHISHOLM MacDONALD

TORONTO (CP) — Soothsayers by the thousands descend on Toronto next week, their crystal ball brimming with a world of predictions.

They're not mystics, actually, although they probably could do with some occult assistance to penetrate the vast and unseen horizons before them.

The occasion is the first global conference on the future — a myriad of question marks and forecasts stretching from life and times in the 1980s to what may befall the movers and shakers of world development far into the next century and beyond.

Scientists, politicians, teachers, urban and corporate planners, theologians and sociologists and "other individuals of goodwill and vision will address specific quetions of worldwide concern," says a promotional brochure announcing the July 20-24 meeting.

The conference combines the third general assembly of the World Future Society and the annual meeting of the Canadian Futures Society. More than 4,000 delegates from over 40 countries, including a number from the Third World, will include in their spectrum such topics as:

—Is it feasible to produce a synthetic food pill for temporary relief in famine areas?

—Where will exploration of outer space, under the oceans and throughout the frozen poles eventually lead mankind?

A noted science and science-fiction writer isn't coming to the sessions but he's sending a robot in his place.

Although the over-all theme of the conference is Through the '80s; thinking globally, acting locally, one session is dubbed The Next Billion Years

Name almost anything; it'll be on the agenda.

So many topics pose a problem

Program organizers are generally ecstatic about the get-together while others see some problems in this type of meeting.

Conference chairman Frank Feather, vice-president of the Canadian society, said the international flavor of the meeting will give people more of a global outlook than other types of conferences.

"We must get people to appreciate that North America is not the centre of the world."

He said an advance survey of delegates indicates the main problems facing the future will be family affairs, lifestyle and culture, as well as some emphasis on the roles of women and electronics in society.

"People have had energy to their back teeth. It won't be a main topic of discussion."

Hank Koehn, a vice-president of Security Bank in Los Angeles, said there could be some problems with a conference this size, with so many diverse sessions going on concurrently that people are bound to miss some provocative discussions.

Koehn, who was invited but is not attending because of other commitments, said there is "perhaps a danger of too much; of an information overload — whereby some interesting things will fall through the cracks.

"In most conferences, people see only the world of yesterday and today and try to project this into the future.

"But this sort of conference shifts the focus of things. They try to create future thinking — it's a shift forward in values and attitudes."

Some of the scheduled speakers are Italian industrialist Aurelio Peccei, founder of the Club of Rome; Filipino official Rafael Salas, head of the United Nations population activities; German author Robert Jungk; Indian urban planner Rashmi Mayur; French social scientist Bertrand de Jouvenel; Argentine economist Andre van Dam; Italian sociologist Eleonora Masini and Swiss economist Bruno Fritsch.

Canadian speakers on agenda

Canadian speakers include senators Maurice Lamontagne and Alister Grossart, Anglican Archbishop Ted Scott, financier Maurice Strong, scientist Omond Solandt and Walter Pitman, executive director of the Ontario Arts Council.

The United States will be represented by policy analyst Herman Kahn, author-diplomat Harlan Cleveland, public opinion analyst Florence Skelly, environmentalist Lester Brown and others.

Edward Cornish, president of the World Future Society, said no one expects a solution to the world's problems with this one gathering but organizers hope to lay the framework for future meetings.

"Remember, there will be 4,000 people at this meeting but there are about four billion people in the world.

"We hope this small minority of the human race can help move the rest toward a consensus on solving their problems.

"We've got to have a dialogue because everyone sees his destiny as different. In reality, we're all interrelated."

Ian H. Wilson, a senior consultant in public policy research at General Electric Co., Fairfield, Conn., said the conference "can scarcely fail to be stimulative," but he also acknowledged there could be problems.

"I think it could be too big. It could be a very large multi-ring circus. There'll be lots of people you won't see or hear."

However, there will be a daily newsletter published at the sessions, keeping delegates and others posted on what they are unable to attend.

Ronna Klingenberg, a trend analysis director with the American Council of Life Insurance in Washington, said she has attended previous futurist conferences but they were on a smaller scale.

"In the '60s we had nothing like this," she said. "If we had such an organization in those days we would have been better prepared to face the energy crisis.

Kanata confirmed yacht race winner

Kanata, Vlad Plavsic's West Vancouver sloop, has been officially declared over-all winner of the Victoria-Maui yacht racing classic.

The corrected-time results were released Tuesday, shortly after 31-foot Lucy Alice of Seattle, smallest vessel in the fleet of 35 finishers, crossed the finish line at about 5 p.m. PDT.

Race Passage from Bremerton was Division I winner. Kanata also took Division II, and Zuben Ubi IV from Seattle, was first in Division III.

No speed records were broken in the race.

The 61-foot sloop Triumph, from Scottsdale, Ariz. but sailing out of San Diego, made the fastest crossing, just over 13 days for the 2,300-nautical-mile race. Previous record, set in 1978, was just over 10 days.

Yachts in the first 10 positions on corrected time were: Kanata; Zuben Ubi IV; Tomahawk, Balboa, Calif.; Kelea, Vancouver; Virginia Dare, Seattle; Race Passage; Brother Goose, Seattle; Wizard, Portland; Topkapi, West Vancouver; and Chiron, Tacoma.

Saskatchewan decriminalizes 'magic fungus'

SASKATOON (CP) — Possession of "magic mushrooms" containing the hallucinogenic drug psilocybin will no longer be considered an offence in Saskatchewan following a recent Saskatoon provincial court decision.

Crown prosecutor Dogan Akman of the federal justice department said that if charges of possession or trafficking are laid in connection with the plant material, they will be withdrawn at the department level.

Akman made his comments after Judge Marian Wedge found Roy Albert Braun not guilty of a charge under section 42 (2) of the federal Food and Drug Act. Braun, who was represented by lawyer Roger Kergot, had been accused of possession of a restricted drug for the purpose of trafficking.

Judge Wedge agreed with six Court of Appeal judges in Alberta and B.C. when she ruled that possession of dried mushrooms containing the restricted drug psilocybin is not prohibited by the Food and Drug Act.

"As the law stands now, until there is a different kind of decision rendered, possession of these magic mushrooms is not an offence," said Akman.

Braun was charged with possession of psilocybin for the purpose of trafficking Feb. 6 when he and Charles Surline were apprehended by RCMP drug squad members.

Braun took police to his car where they discovered five seven-gram bags of marijuana and three plastic bags containing a total of 29 red gelatin capsules filled with a greenish-brown powder.

In her July 4 decision, Judge Wedge said the Crown proved the accused had sufficient knowledge and control of the plant material to establish possession but noted the difficult question was whether the mushroom is prohibited under the Food and Drug Act.

Prior to Braun's May 18 trial, the only case in Canada dealing with possession of psilocybin as a natural ingredient were three decisions in B.C. Judge Wedge noted that all three hold that possession of magic mushrooms is not an offence.

Akman said the Crown does not plan to appeal the case.

250 wizards are at work in the energy woods

By RONDA WARD
FP News Service

OTTAWA — There is a ghostly glow over the forest. Mysterious explosions rock the night. Wizards are at work in the woods.

250 of them.

They are scientists and researchers working for CANMET (Canadian Mineral and Energy Technology), the research branch of Energy, Mines and Resources.

They're lonely.

The huge complex where they work is situated deep in a wooded area near Bells Corners, just outside Ottawa.

What's more, the wizards are just bursting with information on energy topics that they're dying to impart, but nobody ever comes to call.

So, the other day, Judy Erola, Minister for Mines, combed the highways and the byways of Parliament Hill, inviting MPs, senators and journalists to an afternoon luncheon and tour of the site. She arranged two shifts of buses to shuttle the masses from downtown to the fringes of the city. A colorful marquee was insurance against inclement weather. Nobody was going to rain on this parade.

But when the buses arrived at the landscaped think-tank, they contained few of the expected visitors, a sprinkling of Science and Technology personnel and a handful of EMR staff, including a bevy of Erola's Hill secretaries.

Sometimes you can't give it away.

After a genteel picnic on the grounds, the guests were escorted through ten buildings that make up the complex. Scientists bounded at their heels like puppies, eager to show off the multitude of projects.

It's a busy place. Building One houses the Canadian Combustion Research Laboratory (CCRL). It sounds like a mouthful, but these fellows are dying to tell Canadians how to save money by updating their furnaces or getting the most mileage out of a diesel engine car. If you've been wanting to get advice on woodstoves or fireplace efficiency, these are the experts.

Alternative energy sources are the concern of everyone. If there's a way, the CANMET team will find it. They've been working on methods of extracting bitumen from the tar sands. Through a process called 'hydro-cracking', they've been able to create a synthetic oil with the use of a 'secret' catalyst. Every laboratory should have a secret catalyst.

One group happened upon the daily ritual of coke being taken out of the furnace after ten hours. In the steel industry this major component is made from U.S. imports of coal — 8 million tons a year. CANMET is trying to find suitable mixtures of Canadian coal for the same purpose.

Many of the experiments look like the creations of Rube Goldberg, complete with valves, tubes, wires and bubbling liquids. Models of pilot plants and scaled-down industrial systems cover the walls with metallic modern art. One visitor quipped, "I hope they remember how all this stuff works."

They do.

Among the many studies under way at CANMET:

— coal gasification, the puzzle of how to harness the methane gas that coal gives off as it is mined.

— certification of underground machinery, to insure that no machinery in Canadian mines will ignite the highly flammable methane that is ever present in the shaft.

— fluidized-bed combustion, a method by which low-grade coal or other inferior fuels are burned in a bed of granular material (such as crushed limestone) to increase energy output with little or no pollution.

— development of new mining equipment, such as the diesel engine now being designed that emits the exhaust through water, to cut down on fumes underground.

Newfies have funniest place names

By KERI SWEETMAN

OTTAWA (CP) — The village of Massive, Alta., wasn't large enough to make it into the 1976 Canadian census but it did find a spot in the just-published Canada Gazateer Atlas.

So did the communities of Punkeydoodles Corners, Ont., Alcan Trailer Court, B.C., Honeymoon, Sask., and Leading Tickles (West, East and South), Nfld.

The atlas, published this month by the federal government and MacMillan of Canada, is the most comprehensive geographic reference book Canada has ever produced.

It took 70 geographers, cartographers (map-drawers) and toponymists (experts in place names) in the department of energy, mines and resources almost four years to put the 170-page work together.

he book describes Canada's 15.3 million square kilometres with 48 colored pages of maps and a 64-page index listing all 22,000 communities in Canada, including 1,800 with 50 residents or more whose names have not been approved by the provinces.

"Places like Al's Trailer Park might not sound like much but they're communities like any other place," says Falconer.

The atlas also lists 13,000 rivers, mountains, lakes, coves and bays.

Fittingly, it has a gold maple leaf on its cover.

There are already about 6,000 topographical maps of Canada available, but none brings together the amount of information included in this latest work, Falconer said in an interview Monday.

The closest he could come to a cost estimate for the project was "hundreds of thousands of dollars." Bookstores are charging $39.95.

Aside from its use as a handy reference book, the atlas also has certain sentimental value, says Falconer.

"There's something about turning the pages...it just makes you think about the history of this country and all the people who went into building it and where they came from."

Canadians have named their communities after capitals of the world, animals, queens, battles and hometowns across the ocean.

For those in search of Paradise, it can be found in Newfoundland, Ontario, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Quebec.

Victoria is the queen of place names. Her name or its variants appear 32 times.

For the adventurous, there's Damnable Bay, Nfld., with the nearby placenames of Bloody Reach, Dark Cove and Salvage.

"Bet it was fun getting out of that place after dark," laughs Falconer.

Also on the darker side are the uncertain waters of Lake Despair, Ont., Desolation Sound, B.C., and Desperation Lake, N.W.T.

And one of Falconer's favorite tongue-twisters is Keeseekoowenin, an Indian reserve in Manitoba.

He'll allow that Newfoundland probably boasts the funniest names but is concerned that the islanders' feelings will be hurt by his saying so. As consolation, he adds that the placename Newfoundland is one of the oldest in Canada.

Fourteen thousand copies of the gazateer-atlas were printed for this first run, including the French version published by Guerin editeur.

A second printing is possible if demand is great enough and a similar project may be undertaken in a few years if the first is judged a success.

Forces' problems 'under gun'

CALGARY (CP) — Problems with housing, recruiting, pay and morale in the Canadian Armed Forces will be "put under the gun," says Chief of Defence Staff General Ramsey Withers.

Withers, appointed to the armed forces' highest position six weeks ago, said in an interview Monday that housing and morale issues need close examination.

He has already organized a study group to look at military housing concerns.

The armed forces is beginning to reap the benefits of planes, tanks and vehicles purchased in the last five years, Withers said, adding the Canadian public is ready to recognize the importance of a strong military force.

The force now stands at about 79,000 person, he said, about 4,000 short of his ideal of 83,000 persons.

The 49-year-old army officer was in Calgary for Armed Forces' Day at the Stampede.

Common sense in woods lifesaver

WINNIPEG (CP) — William Koonz says common sense and a will to survive kept him going for 13 days without food in the wilds of northern Manitoba.

Koonz, 34, a government biologist, was stranded when a canoe overturned June 27 in rapids of the Churchill River, about 210 kilometers south of Churchill.

Koonz' companion, William Anderson, 40, of Colorado, is missing and presumed drowned.

"There is no reason anyone can't survive in the wilderness for an extended period, as long as you use common sense to overcome problems and fits of frustration and despair," Koonz said in an interview Monday.

"What you also need is . . . a belief that eventually someone will come to get you."

Koonz, interviewed in his Winnipeg home, said he and Anderson set out June 26 from North Indian Lake, to find nesting sites of peregrine falcon.

He said they knew their trip along the Churchill River would be a difficult one, because water flow in the region had been reduced by hydro-electric dams.

On the second day of their trip, they completed a portage about 16 kilometers west of Billard Lake and noticed they were approaching fast water.

"My partner, who was an experienced canoeist, said 'go for it', instead of heading for shore. We made it through the first three or four waves. On the last wave, we hit a rock, and I was pitched out to the right."

Koonz said he grabbed two gas cans for flotation, which helped save him from the river's undertow.

"The last I saw of my partner, he was using a paddle to keep the canoe upright," he said. The canoe then overturned but he could not reach it.

"I lost a rubber boot as I kicked to reach the north shore. But I just couldn't make headway against the river. Through all of this, I said to myself, 'I'm not going to die', and it gave me strength."

Koonz finally hit bottom in the middle of the river and noticed a series of rocks about six metres wide and 20 metres long above the water's surface.

That was where he stayed, coping with mosquitoes and temperatures that dropped to about five degrees Celsius, until he was rescued last Thursday by an airplane.

To protect himself, Koonz built a rock wall and cut open a gasoline container to screen himself from the rain. For the first few days, the weather was bad.

"Once I had been tested for wind, rain, sun, wetness, cold, and psychologically, for the fate of my friend and his family, I had to come to grips with spending time without going nuts.

"I found the best way was to think about things in minute detail—the components of an electrical system, building a rec room, or just the position of the furniture at home.

"The worst way is to count out the 3,600 seconds in an hour."

Koonz was unable to walk after the ordeal, but doctors believe the problem is only temporary. He also lost 10 kilograms.

Metric signs vandalized

RED DEER (CP) — Anti-metric protesters vandalized more than 100 road signs in four central Alberta counties during the weekend.

Signs for speed or distance in metric were painted over and a poster was placed over many more reading "Protect Your Heritage, Think Miles."

Dick Randall, secretary of the Alberta Anti-Metric Committee, offered "no comment" when asked whether he had any knowledge of the incident.

Alberta ranch's animals rival Noah's ark

PINCHER CREEK, Alta. (CP) — Thousands of motorists do double takes when they spot Barney Zoratti's hobby as they pass his sprawling estate in the Alberta foothills.

For as they drive by they see buffalo, Tibetan yak, a llama, a few dwarf Sicilian donkeys, a Texas longhorn or two and some exotic cattle such as white-belted Galloways and shaggy Scottish Highland cattle.

Zoratti, a 65-year-old "semi-retired" rancher, decided about four years ago to dabble in exotic breeds. And his collection is not yet complete.

"I thought about zebras," he says while travelling about in a four-wheel-drive vehicle. "But they're too mean.

"I thought about camels, but they're too ugly.

"I've been thinking about getting a musk ox or two, but my wife is kind of against it. They can be mean and she's afraid I might get myself killed one of these days."

But it's obvious that Zoratti, given the opportunity, wouldn't pass up a chance to add a musk ox to his collection, no matter how ornery it might be.

Zoratti plans to cross-breed and raise the best possible strain of cattle for southern Alberta's harsh and unpredictable winters.

"I would hope that something will pay off because it is an expensive hobby," he says. "The main objective is to cross-breed.

"The hardier the cattle in this country the better."

Present plans call for crossing a yak with Galloways, Herefords and Scottish Highlands. If successful, they might look a little peculiar but then it depends on who is looking.

To Zoratti, even his awkward-looking female yak Dee-Dee, which follows him around like a pet dog, is a beautiful sight. There is no way he would sacrifice her for the $7 a pound that some restaurants are willing to pay for yak meat.

He says Dee-Dee, the favorite of the herd, is unusual.

Normally yaks are far from gentle, but bottle-feeding Dee-Dee from the time she was a young calf has made a difference.

That's the case with several of Zoratti's animals such as a cow buffalo purchased when she was six months old. Although attempts to halter-train her by pulling her behind a pickup truck didn't work, she is still unusually tame.

But that isn't true of all of Zoratti's animals. A dehorned yak named Sam is kept corralled.

He says it would kill a domestic bull if given the chance.

"It just wouldn't stop fighting."

One motorist recently stopped to ask why white blankets had been draped over the backs of what appeared to be Black Angus cattle. Actually they were white-belted Galloways.

Zoratti likely will have more inquiries in months to come, not only from passers-by, but also from government officials.

A recently completed consultant's report on southwestern Alberta tourism recommends that public tours be offered at the ranch.

Manitoba hog farmers need aid

WINNIPEG (CP) — Bill Vaags, chairman of the Manitoba Hog Producers Association, says the government must take immediate action to help hundreds of hog producers facing bankruptcy.

"Many producers have closed their operations," Vaags said in an interview Monday: "I'm getting calls every day from small and large operators who are saying there's just no use going on.

"Comparatively, prices haven't been so low since the 1930s."

Vaags said an oversupply of pork has depressed hog prices in Canada and the United States, and drought conditions in Manitoba have dried up feed crops, forcing producers to import feed.

Hog prices in the last nine months have dropped from a profit position to a loss of $35 to $40 a hog, said Vaags. "This is the first time in history we've made pleas for assistance."

He said almost all other province has some form of assistance for hog producers, and without such help, 30 per cent of Manitoba producers could be out of business by the end of the year.

Vaags said if there is no immediate government action, the Manitoba economy could lost more than $240 million. Manitoba hog producers receive $48 a hundredweight on the market. Provincial government subsidies guarantee producers $61 a hundredweight in Alberta and $75 in British Columbia.

Manitoba hog producers at a meeting last month unanimously passed a resolution urging the government to act quickly and provide them with a deficiency payment, retroactive to Jan. 1.

Bill Munro, manager of the Manitoba Hog Producers' Marketing Board, said hog producers in the province have had to absorb a $19.5 million loss in the first six months of 1980.

Trades unions stay with CLC

CALGARY (CP) — Canadian construction union leaders have ended a two-day convention here without settling the thorny issue of American control of many Canadian building trades unions.

Despite a bitterly-worded resolution and several hours of debate, the Canadian sections of 14 international unions that represent Canada's 400,000 construction workers leave the convention still affiliated with the Canadian Labor Congress.

In keeping with their traditions of fiercely-guarded autonomy and not especially fervent Canadian nationalism, the building unions have dumped a final decision on CLC affiliation into the laps of their United States-based international headquarters.

They also decided to continue witholding annual dues payments to the congress, a decision which deprives the congress of up to 20 per cent of its annual budget.

Complaints by the building trades against the CLC are numerous, rooted in what they see as a failure of the national labor organization to police its affiliates and control its members, and nurtured by what they call the arrogance of its president, Dennis McDermott.

Topping the list of grievances at the convention were McDermott's refusal to reprimand the Quebec Federation of Labor for intervening in constructioin union affairs in Quebec, and his inability to stop industrial unions affiliated with the congress from raiding building trades members in British Columbia.

These issues caused two building trades representatives to resign from the CLC executive in April and set off the boycott of dues and of the congress's national convention in May.

But the differences run deeper, to long-standing complaints over the CLC's voting structure, and to an almost-as-old concern on the part of the congress that the international unions weren't Canadian enough in the character of their leadership elections and decision procedures.

An attempt by the congress to impose such Canadian standards on the internationals in 1974 brought the building trades to the verge of withdrawal, arguing the standards interfered with their autonomy.

The issue was raised again on the floor of this convention, by B.C. and Ontario provincial council delegates.

Poverty lobby impoverished

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's national lobby for the poor is poverty-stricken, and the federal government is withholding part of its annual grant to the debt-ridden group.

The health and welfare department and representatives of National Anti-Poverty Organization, will meet today in Ottawa to try to work out a rescue plan.

A health and welfare department official said Tuesday that the government still doesn't know how far the organization is in debt, although he believed it to be about $100,000.

The federally-funded organization, a coalition of 1,800 groups representing the poor, received a $164,000 federal grant this year, but part of that has been witheld until the rescue plan has been arranged.

Opening lead — king of diamonds

Let's assume you get to six spades and West leads the king of diamonds. When dummy comes down, it looks as though you've bitten off more than you can chew. You seem destined to lose a heart and a club and go down one.

You might therefore conclude that your leap to six spades was perhaps too exuberant, but — if you think about the matter objectively — you should feel satisfied that your jump to the slam was fully justified. After all, on the bidding, your partner was likely to have a singleton heart, in which case making twelve tricks would have been virtually certain.

However, this is not the moment when you should be grieving about what might have been. Instead, you should be thinking about how to make the slam and dismiss all other thoughts from your mind.

If you think hard enough, you realize that the slam can almost surely be made. West could hardly have opened the bidding without the ace of clubs, and you therefore automatically assign that card to him.

Accordingly, you ruff the king of diamonds at trick one. (If you incorrectly played the ace from dummy you'd eventually go down one.) Then, after playing the king of spades, you lead the seven of clubs towards dummy.

West now finds himself in an impossible position. If he goes up with the ace of clubs, you later discard the J-5 of hearts on dummy's queen of clubs and ace of diamonds.

If West follows low on your seven of clubs lead, you win the trick in dummy with the queen, discard the king of clubs on the ace of diamonds, and your only loser proves to be a heart trick. Keeping your eye on the ball turns out to be the solution to the problem.

Ron was reading a travel folder. "They have sales taxes here in Kalota," he said. "Government tax twelve per cent, Knockado city tax five per cent on the retail price."

"Sure, but it works out very fairly," Mike replied. "When calculting the amount of either tax you deduct the amount of the other tax from the retail price of the item."

"Sounds complicated," Ron commented. "For example, a camera I saw today, price 497 krus. What taxes would I pay on that?"

Pot to offset cancer drugs nearer

OTTAWA (CP) — Marijuana may be available for prescription within a year for patients suffering from the side effects of cancer drugs, according to a federal health official.

Dr. Ian Henderson, head of the bureau of drugs, said preliminary but successful results of clinical trials on cancer patients in Winnipeg and Vancouver means the drug could licensed under narcotic control.

The action would require parliamentary approval, he added. And the drug would only be available from physicians, in hospitals and cancer clinics.

Cancer researchers are using the active marijuana chemical ingredient THC, short for tetra-hydro-cannabinol, in the form of a gel capsule obtained from the health department.

Up to 15 milligrams of THC, the chemical ingredient giving the drug its so-called "high" effect, is distributed to patients before and after treatment if symptoms persist, Henderson said in an interview.

"This is definitely providing good control of vomiting and nausea," he said. These are common side effects of cancer drugs.

The clinical tests involve a total of about 200 patients and began a year ago, Henderson said.

They are being conducted at the cancer clinic in Winnipeg with University of Manitoba researchers and in the Vancouver clinic involving University of British Columbia scientists.

Henderson said a third trial is expected to begin soon at in Hamilton, Ont., with researchers from McMaster University.

"Fifty per cent of the patients are getting real benefits from the drug," he said.

But he cautioned that "this is not a panacea for everyone."

Most cancer patients are elderly, he said.

"The older patients don't like it. They get high and dizzy and really find it distasteful."

Henderson says the Canadian work parallels similar research being done in other countries, mostly in the United States.

Patients in Seattle and in Springfield, Ill., are also being treated with marijuana.

"In a year from now we'll be in a position to look at the clinical trials in Canada and other countries," said Henderson.

Nazi to get parole

BARI, Italy (AP) — A military court decided Monday to grant parole within five years to Walter Reder, the last Nazi war criminal held in Italy.

Alberta denies rail control talk

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta is definitely not interested in gaining joint control with B.C. of all railway lines west of Winnipeg, Transport Minister Henry Kroeger said Monday.

He denied published reports of a meeting between the Alberta and B.C. cabinets last weekend quoting Alex Fraser, B.C. transport minister, as saying the two governments may try to gain control of all railway lines west of Winnipeg.

"The story startled the hell out of me," Kroeger said in an interview. "It really throws me because it's certainly not our position and it didn't come into any of the discussions we had in Victoria."

Kroeger, one of three Alberta ministers on a new intergovernmental cabinet committee investigating the two provinces' transportation needs, said most of the private meeting in the rail area dealt with B.C. port development.

None of the Alberta ministers can recall any discussion of buying out the CNR and CP Rail operations in Western Canada, he said.

Meanwhile, Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau has said the federal government will not give up responsibility for railways and transportation between provinces.

Ordeal in the wilderness

SEQUOIA NATIONAL PARK, Calif. (AP) — With only a trickle of slimy water for substinence, a Michigan teenager survived 11 days in the wilderness after breaking his ankles climbing rocks, park officials say.

Mark Fridley, 16, was rescued by helicopter Tuesday after three off-duty park rangers found him in steep terrain at the base of Moro Rock, a 2,250-metre high granite monolith, said park spokesman Irma Buchholz.

Fridley, of Bloomfield Hills, Mich., was admitted to hospital in stable condition.

He apparently started hiking by himself on July 4 and fell when trying to scale Moro Rock, located away from marked trails, Buchholz said.

"As far as we know he subsisted on a trickle of water that went over rocks and moss," she said. "There was no food."

The rangers who found Fridley said he was unable to move, but was in good spirits.

A helicopter dispatched from the U.S. Naval Air Station at China Rock, about 130 kilometres southeast of the park, lifted the youth to safety, Ms. Buchholz said.

Fridley's parents had called park headquarters when they had not heard from their son, who had telephoned them every day during his solitary travels through California, Buccholz said.

But park officials did not find a wilderness permit issued to him, and concluded he had gone to his next destination, Yosemite National Park.

'Big 5 oil earnings up 46% over '79'

NEW YORK (AP) — Second-quarter earnings of the five largest oil companies in the U.S. will be 46 per cent above those of a year earlier but won't match the record profits of 1980's first three months, Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith Inc. said Tuesday.

For the entire year, the companies' profits "are expected to be even greater than the exceptionally high level of 1979" and are likely to exceed 1979's results by at least 30 per cent, said a report by Constantine Fliakos, an analyst for the brokerage house.

Major U.S. oil companies are expected to begin reporting second-quarter earnings in several days, with No. 1 Exxon Corp. scheduled to announce results early next week.

For the group — comprising Exxon, Mobil Corp., Texaco Inc., Standard Oil Company of California and Gulf Oil Corp. — Merill Lynch said second-quarter earnings are expected to total $3.4 billion.

The total is nearly a 25-per-cent drop from the $4.5 billion recorded in the first quarter but is about 46 per cent above the group's $2.3 billion earnings in the second quarter of 1979. The group's profits for 1980 were forecast by Fliakos at $14.5 billion, up 30 per cent from 1979.

Although gasoline and heating oil use has dropped sharply as prices have increased following the revolution in Iran in late 1978, earnings from the oil group's refining and marketing activities here and overseas remained strong in the second quarter, Fliakos said.

Medical team flees rebels

SALISBURY (Reuter) — Britain's Save the Children Fund has withdrawn its medical team from an area of central Zimbabwe because of threats against white nurses by dissident black guerrillas, the relief organization's director said Tuesday.

Euan Lindsay-Smith told Reuters news agency the two nurses — Mary Jean Mackie of New Zealand and Maureen Hetherington of Zimbabwe — were pulled out after being threatened in the Nkai area.

The bush fighters belong to Joshua Nkomo's Zimbabwe People's Revolutionary Army and have left ceasefire assembly camps in a rebellion against Prime Minister Robert Mugabe's government.

Some Hood jolts from road work?

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — Road construction crews blasting stumps on Mount Hood may have been responsible for dozens of the smaller jolts recorded as earthquakes on the Oregon volcano last week, a geologist says.

And while scientists attempted Tuesday to determine the cause of a blue haze around nearby Mount St. Helens, law enforcement authorities planned to resume their search for the bodies of those killed in the Washington volcano's May 18 eruption.

The bodies of 28 people killed in that blast have been recovered. Another 36 people still are listed as missing.

Both mountains, 110 kilometres apart and separated by the Columbia River, were reported quiet Tuesday. The steam plume from St. Helens barely cleared the rim of the volcano's crater.

U.S. Geological Survey (USGS) scientists Tim Hait said that while some of the tiny seismic disturbances on Mount Hood may have been caused by human activity, a series of legitimate earthquakes was recorded on the peak.

The quakes remaining after the very minor shocks are ruled out as blasts or aftershocks still show the pattern which geologists outlined late last week, Hait told a Tuesday news briefing.

Hait said that pattern is typical of Mount Hood during the past two to five years and he said USGS geologists are sticking by their earlier statements that Mount Hood is in no danger of volcanic eruption.

Hait said seismic data indicate as many as 60 of the 170 quakes reported on Mount Hood last week could have been blasts or aftershocks.

In Washington's Cowlitz County, Deputy Ben Bena said helicopters will carry ground crews and search dogs into the Fawn Lake and Elk Rock areas north of Mount St. Helens on Thursday if weather permits.

Hait speculated a blue haze reported around St. Helens' summit recently could be related to the same kind of chemical process that creates a haze around some industrial plants.

PLO 'plot' smashed

Associated Press

Israeli security forces announced Tuesday the arrest of seven Palestinian Arabs accused of plotting to assassinate Agriculture Minister Ariel Sharon, who directs Israel's settlement policy in occupied Arab territories.

A government statement said the seven Palestinians — members of the Arab Liberation Front — had carried out several other terrorist acts, but did not elaborate.

In other Middle East developments Tuesday:

— Israel said its warships confiscated a boatload of armored personnel carriers bound for Palestinian guerrillas. Deputy Defence Minister Mordecai Zippori told the Israeli parliament 26 armored vehicles had been taken from a freighter bound for Lebanon two months ago.

— Egypt and Israel wound up two days of talks in Cairo on a Palestinian self-rule plan with another public clash over the status of Arab East Jerusalem.

— Israeli-backed Christian forces and Palestinian guerrillas fought artillery duels in southern Lebanon that left four dead and seven wounded in the town of Nabatiyeh, officials in Beirut said.

— Israeli lawyers were studying their own country's unusual anti-terrorist laws and Israel's extradition treaty with Denmark to see if they can legally request the Danes to hand over a 33-year-old Palestinian woman involved in two guerrilla air hijackings a decade ago.

An Israeli foreign ministry official said Tuesday that government lawyers had been unable to determine if Leila Khaled's extradition from Denmark is possible.

Miss Khaled is a member of the Palestine Liberation Organization's delegation to the United Nations' women's conference in Copenhagen. She joined a walkout of Arab delegates Tuesday when Jihan Sadat, wife of the Egyptian president, began to address the conference.

Miss Khaled was a member of the terrorist squad that hijacked a Trans World Airlines jet in Syria in August, 1969.

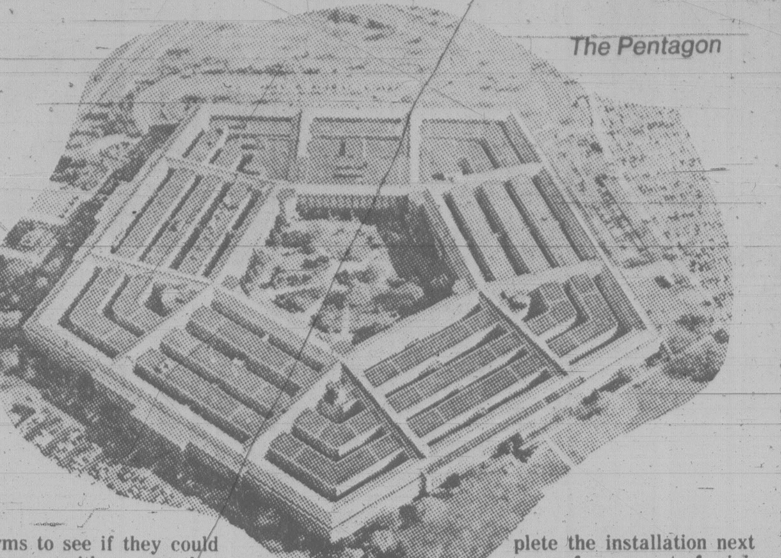
WANTED: a war game for training generals

By JOHN FIALKA
Washington Star



The Pentagon

WASHINGTON — U.S. Defence Department officials are shopping for a new war game, one that would give high-level policy makers new insights on strategies that might be used by either side to change the outcome of a large-scale nuclear war.

The effort is part of a change in emphasis on research and strategic training that is under way in the Pentagon, which appears to be turning away from the so-called "bean-counting" method of using large computers to measure and model the forces of war. It is returning to the more human-centred war gaming that was extensively used by Germany and Japan during the Second World War.

"We have long been dissatisfied with the kinds of analyses that we do to measure the strategic balance of power," explained Dr. Andrew Marshall, who heads Secretary of Defence Harold R. Brown's Office of Net Assessments.

Straight computer projections of the results of missile exchanges, asserts Marshall, "may be too stereotyped to deal with the actual case." His office recently committed $1.6 million to two outside research firms to see if they could come up with a game that would allow opposing teams to play through a theatre (regional) nuclear war and its aftermath.

The primary function of the game would be to help analysts see how various weapons and strategies might be used in a nuclear conflict, although Marshall said that high-level defence policy makers might also make use of such a game to get a feel for types of decisions they may have to make in a major war.

The two research firms, the Rand Corp. and Science Applications Inc., will demonstrate models of the games they are developing next January. If the Pentagon finds one of them to be realistic enough, Marshall says, "there will be a large number of interested parties here."

The Pentagon's search for a game that will allow humans to tamper with the "big picture" as presented by the computers also has a parallel in the Army War College, which will complete the installation next year of a new set of mini-computer-driven war game devices that will allow future generals to challenge and innovate around established army tactics and doctrines.

One of the more interesting figures involved in both these efforts is James F. Dunnigan, the 36-year-old owner of Simulations Publications Inc., a New York City company that sells war games to hobbyists.

Dunnigan, who once rose to the rank of corporal in the Army, has argued for 10 years that the Pentagon's approach to studying warfare was flawed because its planners were subordinating the lessons of history to the more-favored statistical methods of analysis. Finally, it appears that people in high places are beginning to listen to Jim Dunnigan.

"We've tried to encourage these contractors to go out and talk to people like Dunnigan," explained Marshall.

"Dunnigan is a genius," asserted Col. Raymond Macedonia, director of war gaming simulations at the Army War College. "He gave us some really fascinating ideas."

Dunnigan who began nurturing suspicions about the failings of military minds while working as an Army missile techician in Korea, later went to Columbia University. Exasperated at the "lack of historicity," in small Monopoly-like war games then in use by hobbyists, he designed his first game based on the First World War naval battle of Jutland.

One thing led to another. SPI was launched in 1970 on a financial shoestring and the support of Dunnigan's part-time job as a night watchman. Last year SPI sold over $2 million worth of war games, ranging from such classics as "Von Hindenburg in Poland" and "Napoleon's Last Battles" to contemporary games such as "Oil War" "Fulda Gap, the First Battle of the Next War" and "After the Holocaust."

The last one sees the United States split into a group of competing regional sub-nations 20 years after the impact of an all-out nuclear war.

Lots of rules

Dunnigan's games are not for the average Monopoly enthusiast. They come with thick rule books and alternate scenarios that can take days and weeks to learn. One of Dunnigan's hopes is to make the game accurate enough to let the player begin to approach the mental processes of the successful and the unsuccessful commander in a given battle.

The Army War College has a whole library of Dunnigan's games and Dunnigan is a frequent lecturer there. The CIA admits to having a small club of gamesmen who play SPI games after hours. Marshall has a Dunnigan game on his desk and he recently invited Dunnigan to a session at a defence consulting firm in Northern Virginia, where a former Nazi panzer division commander, Gen. Hermann Balck, matched his deployment style against that of the U.S. tank generals.

The game was a defence against a simulated Soviet armor attack on U.S. forces in West Germany.

"Balck's major criticism was that we did not allow the Russians to commit themselves. He kept saying things like "Dammit, he's got too much up front! He (the American general) needs a bigger reserve!"

Dunnigan believes war games and war gaming are now essential for the U.S. military, which has lagged far behind Germany, the Soviet Union and other nations in the development of battlefield strategists. "We have no military tradition in this country that would normally nurture a military leader. Under the old system you could afford to lose a couple of battles before you found your General Patton. No more."

According to Macedonia, the problem arose after the Second World War when the army contracted out a lot of its planning work to private testing laboratories.

"It tended to get very mechanistic," said Macedonia, who said that this "bean-counting" tendency evolved into giant simulated battles in which computers ran the statistical measures of force on one side against the forces of the other.

Black boxes

The machines "crunched the numbers" and eventually produced a winner and a loser, but no player or group of players knew exactly what went on in the computer memory banks that determined the outcome. "The black boxes" did the war fighting. The officers were there more as observers, Macedonia explained.

During the Vietnam War, war gaming simply stopped at the Army War College and it did not resume again until 1977, when Macedonia and others began to seek ways to put the innovative commander back in the centre of the picture. That's where Dunnigan came in.

"What Dunnigan has been able to do is give us a philosphy of designing games to enhance the creative abilities of the players," says Macedonia. He says the army's new games are "totally transparent. The commander always knows what he's doing and why."

Afghan hockey-team 'massacre' linked to U.S.

Scorchers fan child abuse

The Associated Press

Tempers are rising with the temperatures, some officials are saying, and the three-week heat wave that has killed 689 people in the South and Midwest U.S. may be to blame for a rash of child abuse in Dallas.

Carole Bowdry, director of the child abuse program in the Dallas County child welfare department, said that incidents of child abuse have increased steadily since June 23, when the heat wave began in Dallas:

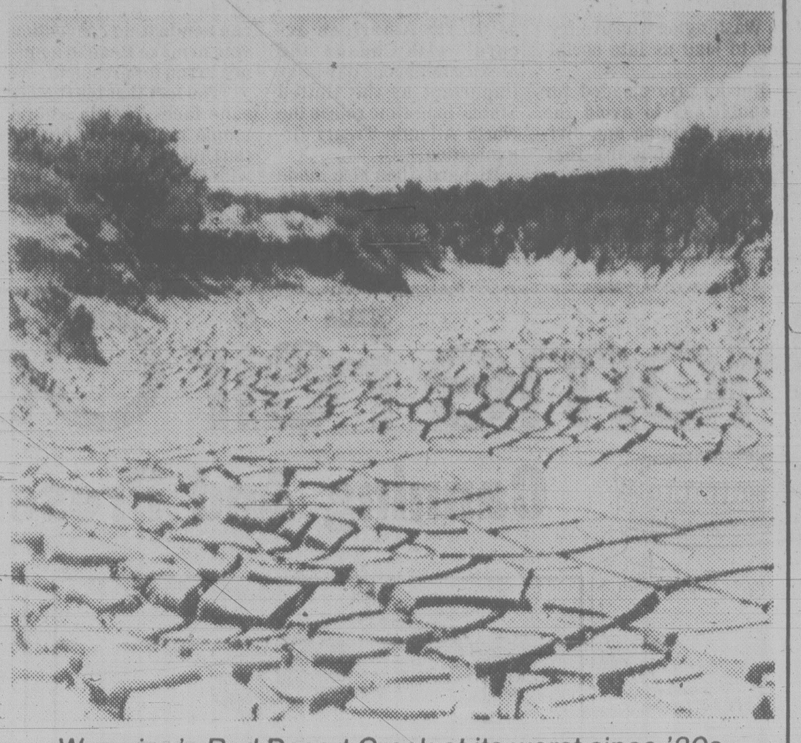
"Historically our worst cases of child abuse have happened in extremely inclement weather of one type or another."

Meanwhile, President Carter directed federal officials to make $6.73 million available in six states to provide relief for poor people put in dangerous situations because of the heat wave. The money will be used to pay utility bills, buy fans and air conditioners and pay for transportation to relief centres

States to receive the assistance are Texas, Missouri, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Kansas.

The National Weather Service has said no relief is in sight, at least until the end of the week.

The heat prompted Alabama Gov. Fob James to declare a state of emergency Tuesday. A state of emergency was put in effect Monday in Missouri.



Wyoming's Red Desert Creek at its worst since '30s

Washington Post

MOSCOW — Afghanistan disclosed Tuesday that 19 members of its national field hockey team were kidnapped and probably massacred in April in the war-torn country. It charged the United States with complicity in the incident.

The disclosure and denunciation of the U.S. boycott of the Soviet Olympic Games in Moscow emerged at a news conference in the Soviet-garrisoned capital of Kabul and was reported here Tuesday by Tass, the Soviet news agency. It seemed carefully timed for maximum political impact, four days before the boycott-damaged Summer Olympic Games open here and with the 24-member Afghan team now in residence at the Olympic Village.

The team declined to meet with a reporter Tuesday, and speaking through a Russian interpreter, asked that all questions be submitted in advance in writing.

But Tass, confirming reports that circulated from Western sources several months ago, quoted three survivors who said their bus was stopped by four armed men outside the northern Afghan city of Kunduz while returning from matches in the Soviet Union April 24.

The driver fled and about 40 "bandits" surrounded the 22 players and three passengers, according to the survivors. Two team members tried to resist "but were immediately killed by the bandits," one of the alleged survivors was quoted as saying.

He said another player was wounded and one of the three other passengers killed. The attackers divided the survivors into small groups and marched them into nearby woods. There they were locked in a guarded shed, and later, he said, an armed interrogator arrived and berated them. "Don't you know that America prohibited sportsmen from competing in the Olympic games? Why did you go to the U.S.S.R.?"

When the guards fell asleep later that night, he and his two friends escaped and made their way to Kabul. The survivors, Tass said, believed "in all probability (their teammates) have been killed."

In a separate Kabul dispatch, Tass declared that "the sportsmen of Afghanistan state in all firmness that the killing of our comrades is directly linked with the Carter administration's policy of boycotting the Olympic Games. We are confident that the peoples of the world will wrathfully condemn that vile crime. The blood of innocent victims is fully on the conscience of Carter and his administration.

The Afghan Olympians here will compete in wrestling and boxing. Other team members, including the soccer and basketball teams, and seven of the 11 wrestlers, defected in recent weeks, in protest against the Soviet invasion of their country that has so politicized the 1980 Olympic Games and left a huge question mark over the future of the Olympic movement.

Unrest badgers SASOL

SECUNDA, South Africa (AP) — Mixed-race construction workers rioted overnight at a vital synthetic oil plant site here, and officials ordered work halted today for the third straight day. The previous shutdowns followed protests by black workers.

A spokesman for SASOL — the South African Coal, Oil and Gas Corp. — said some mixed-race workers set fire to a kitchen in their construction camp late Tuesday.

He said most of the plant's 18,000 construction workers reported to work today, but added: "During the course of the morning some of the construction workers again displayed signs of unrest . . . Construction activities will not be continued for the rest of the day."

The workers were subsequently offered their pay two days early and given until Monday to return to work, the spokesman said.

It was not clear what prompted the latest unrest at the facility, 190 kilometres southeast of Johannesburg, where SASOL is building the country's second and third oil-from-coal plants.

Major oil-exporting countries have banned sales to South Africa because of the white-minority government's racial separatist policies, making crucial the use of South Africaa's huge coal reserves as an energy source.

Two large bungalows at a black construction compound here were burned down Tuesday afternoon, and stonings were reported. On Monday, a white construction worker was dragged from his truck and stoned to death by blacks, witnesses said.

The black rioting began following a rumor that soldiers on guard at the site had fatally shot a black worker. SASOL officials denied the soldiers had shot anyone.

Rumors flying as Reagan ponders VP options

By GLENN SOMERVILLE

DETROIT (CP) — The scramble for second place on a fall campaign ticket with Ronald Reagan grew more frantic Tuesday as Republicans heard pleas to remain united on the eve of officially naming Reagan their nominee for president in a November election.

Rumors and speculation swept the convention as Reagan met privately in his penthouse hotel suite with former president Gerald Ford, who is pushing for a moderate mate to balance Reagan's conservatism.

Reagan quashed the hopes of many of the 1,994 delegates and an equal number of alternatives by saying he hadn't offered the vice-president's job to Ford, and added he still doesn't know who he'll name on Thursday night.

The 69-year-old former governor remains firmly in control of convention proceedings, and saw delegates adopt an extremely conservative platform calling for more defence spending, tax cuts, easier gun control laws, a constitutional ban on abortions and weaker Republican support for an equal rights amendment to protect women's rights.

Reagan forces easily denied a bid by dissident delegates to force a fight on a particularly touchy plank calling for judges to express anti-abortion sentiments before confirmation.

Delegates in the red-, white-and blue bedecked athletic arena later heard a strong speech from a leading conservative contender for the vice-presidential role, former football player and current Buffalo congressman, Jack Kemp.

To an enthusiastic audience, Kemp said the time is right for a Republican team to displace the Democratic administration of Jimmy Carter and once again "make the dollar as good as gold" with effective economic management and to present a stronger foreign policy to the world.

The theme of "making America strong again" is heard constantly here, and was driven home again by former state secretary Henry Kissinger, who received an enthusiastic response.

Americans have become "impotent bystanders as the world lurches from crisis to crisis" under President Carter, Kissinger said, warning that disaster will be irretrievable if the Democrats are re-elected.

"We are making the world safe for anti-Americans radicalism", Kissinger complained, adding that a new administration must demonstrate that "our friendship has benefits while hostility to us involves penalties."

In the vice-presidential race, Kemp's oratory and a placard-waving demonstration by his supporters on the floor of the convention may have enhanced his chances among delegates. Earlier they appeared to strongly favor George Bush, former ambassador and runner-up to Reagan in the nomination race.

Another strong contender, Michigan congressman Guy Vander Jagt, lost his prime-time chance to make the keynote speech Tuesday because activities ran late. Vander Jagt was rescheduled until tonight, and must compete with the state-by-state roll call nomination of Reagan.

Senator Barry Goldwater, the Republican standard-bearer of 1964 who lost the election to the Democrats under Lyndon Johnson, was on hand Tuesday to drum for conservatism and for party unity.

Goldwater complained of "massive frauds by those who won't work" and instead draw welfare, and charged "there are people in Washington who are trying to lead us into socialism."

But he also pleaded for Republicans to avoid the bitter in-fighting and divisiveness that many fear because of the conservative stands that have been adopted here.

Meanwhile, Reagan's top foreign policy adviser said a "North American accord" with Canada and Mexico might one day be as important as the United States' long-time role in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Richard Allen also made a light-hearted reference to Reagan's awareness of Canadian issues and concerns on the eve of the Republican nominating convention vote to make Reagan nominee to run for president.

"The fact that his (hotel) suite faces Canada will be ample reminder to him of the United States' close ties with Canada, Allen said at a press conference before hundreds of foreign journalists.

Reagan has established headquarters at the futuristic Renaissance Centre Hotel, just across the Detroit River from Windsor Ont.

Reagan advocated a North American accord with Canada and Mexico early in his campaign for the Republican nomination, but quickly found both countries reluctant to consider a pact that might give the U.S. access to their oil resources.

Allen acknowledged Tuesday that Reagan "sought not to give a specific formulation" to his proposal, but added it is nonetheless time to consider closer co-operation between the three countries.

Refugees flee in rafts

COPENHAGEN (AP) — Three young East Germans who fled across the Baltic Sea in two small rubber rafts got separated during the night but were rescued and brought to Denmark. Police said two men 27 and 28 years old were picked up five kilometres west of the island of Bornholm while the third, a 28-year-old doctor, was spotted several hours later about 50 km miles to the west by a Swedish yacht. They said they were seeking political asylum in West Germany.

As Lord Killanin ends his eight-year term as president of the International Olympic Committee, James Worrall, a Toronto lawyer, and Juan Antonio Samaranch, the Spanish ambassador to Moscow, are the prime candidates to fill the opening. Members of the committee are arriving for the Olympic Games in Moscow and plan to elect a new president in a week. Worrall, 66, elected to the committee in 1967, is a former Olympic athlete who competed in the hurdles in the 1936 games in Berlin.

MacCollum, who was paid $275 and will get a small, quarterly residual fee as long as the commercial is shown on television, said he would be open to doing other ads. "There would have to be a justifiable reason for me wearing my clergy garb, like if an alcohol rehabilitation clinic wanted me to do a spot," he said.

Dear Abby:

I am a 19-year-old girl who lost my virginity when I was 12. I have had a venereal disease three times. The last time it cost me my right to bear children because I had to have a hysterectomy.

The guys will tell you there is nothing wrong with them, then you find out too late there was. I suppose some guys don't even know they have a disease, but any guy who goes from girl to girl should know that he is taking a big chance.

I just wish I could tell every girl who goes to bed with a guy how foolish she is to take the chances I took. There would be a lot more virgins. I wish my mother would have listened to me when I started asking questions about sex. I was 10 years old and already interested in guys, but my mother said I should be ashamed of myself for even thinking about such things!

Learned Too Late

Dear Abby:

I have two girlfriends. My problem is that Peg and Dot are not on speaking terms. It's not just a temporary little spat that might blow over soon; they have not been speaking for a long time. I am going to be married soon, and I want them both in my wedding party. (I was maid of honor for both.)

Peg says if Dot is in the wedding party, I can count her out. On the other hand, Dot says she doesn't care if Peg is in the wedding party or not, but if she is, she'll ignore her.

September Bride

Dear Bride:

Don't let Peg force you to choose between her and Dot. Tell Peg you want her in your wedding party, but you intend to invite whomever else you want, and she may accept or decline.

Dear Abby:

Four years ago as a volunteer for a crisis centre, I gave lectures on how to prevent rape, never realizing that one day that information would be useful to me.

Recently it was necessary for me to drive a houseguest to the bus station as 3 a.m. After seeing her off, I returned to my car and started home. Soon I noticed a man in another car following me. To make sure I was being followed, I made several turns. After the third turn, he turned off his lights, but kept following me. I did not go home; instead I drove to the police station and began honking my horn, whereupon the man in the other car took off like a rocket.

I would like to tell women: If you suspect you're being followed, never drive home, always drive to the nearest police station and honk your horn. If you don't know where the police station is, drive to an all-night business place and honk your horn. The worst that can happen is that the owner will think you're weird and call the police.

Lucky

Dear Lucky:

Thanks. And anyone who doesn't know where their police station is would do well to find out.

Picnic flare works at home

By PHYLLIS HANES
Christian Science Monitor

It's summer and picnic time. It's the time when everyone has the urge to get away — get outdoors and somehow still avoid using up that expensive tank of gasoline.

Eating away from home is North America's No. 1 hobby, but in July it switches from eating in a restaurant to dining out of doors. Busy people respond to the outdoor life for eating because it saves time and also avoids the chopping and peeling of cooking and the cleanup of meals at home.

But there's more to it than just saving labor. There's something special about eating in the fresh air that seems to make the food taste better. Whether it's cooking the food outdoors or just eating it outside, it has an added dimension.

Some of the most appetizing food in the world is cooked outdoors. The Greeks, Romans, Russians and British are a few of the people who have traditions of outdoor dining, ranging from formal dinners on a boat on the Thames and hunting parties in the Russian woodlands to simple Italian picnics under the willows and French bread-and-cheese lunches in the fields of the Normandy countryside.

Food does taste different. Often, exactly the same thing takes on a new look when hunger is whetted by the fresh air. A hot dog can take on the appeal of a great steak. A well-seasoned stuffed egg can have almost as much attraction as an elegant pate.

But picnics are a whole new ball game as far as locale is concerned. Today there's no need to drive miles to the country to find a peaceful grove or the grassy slope of a rippling brook. Mossy banks are fine, if available, but everything from peanut butter sandwiches to elegant dinners are being served in backyards, beaches and ballparks, in public picnic areas, camping grounds and between the acts of Shakespearean plays at summer theatres.

Not all picnickers leave leftovers for the swans and squirrels to nibble on in city parks. Some prefer bicycling to view the countryside as they leave the city, combining home-cooked foods carried in the bike baskets and duffel bags with a movable view and lots of pleasant breezes.

Research does not tell who first had the idea of eating outside even though there was a perfectly good dining room available, but the person deserves credit for recognizing that nature can do something extra to often ordinary fare.

Webster's definition calls a picnic a pleasure outing at which a meal is eaten outdoors, and most people agree that it is more than a meal outdoors--it is a festive occasion, a break in the ordinary routine, free of many of the ordinary cares and perhaps something of a luxury.

Food always tastes better when cooked and eaten outdoors

On the other hand there are those picnics that are not always perfectly comfortable. Climate can change a sunny day to either scorching or chilly. And how to keep the bugs out of the picnic always is a problem.

Picnic fare is carted and carried to the site in a wide assortment of boxes, baskets and insulated carriers these days, along with the handsome hampers that come equipped with plates and cutlery neatly snapped in place.

Some people like big square baskets with open tops. They're helpful for bulky items like long loaves of bread, and they're easy to carry. Canvas sailing bags and tote bags are handy, too, and others are sold on backpacks. Whatever the choice, small bags or baskets are best if you want children to help with the carrying.

Inside the basket you'll want your own favorite kind of sandwich boxes or plastic containers for fruits, raw vegetables, salt and pepper and other condiments. A lightweight cutting board that doubles as a serving platter is good for many things. A Swiss army knife or something equally handy is a good basic piece of picnic equipment and a thermos bottle and napkins are other permanent things picnicgoers should keep in their basket.

As for what goes inside the picnic baskets, hampers or whatever, people often wonder if the food should be any different from food served inside. The answer is — it depends. There is nothing whatever to stop people from eating salad and meatballs in a pocket of pita bread in the dining room, but somehow it seems more appropriate outdoors.

And you can carefully transport an elegant mousse or molded salad to the country if you want to take the trouble, but this goes against the grain for many people. Some think picnic food should be simple food, simply prepared and that it's an opportunity to take advantage of fresh fruits and vegetables.

Picnic food should be easy to eat even if you're perched on a hillside or spread out on the beach. The best outdoor food for some people needs no last-minute cooking, although cooking outdoors, whether it's an open fire or a barbecue, is some people's idea of perfect dining.

Most North Americans rely heavily on their refrigerator for storing food made ahead of time. But perfectionists say that same-day cooking gives many advantages. Refrigeration dries out meats and can kill the delicate flavors of salads and vegetables. Many dishes are better if they are put in a cool place where the flavors will meld or mellow for a few hours. Many foods require constant refrigeration, however, and some foods are at their best icy cold.

Fruit salads stay crisper and fresher if they are kept cold. Cold soups seem to tast much better if they are very cold. However, if you are making soups with a chicken or fish base, remember that homemade soups often have lots of natural gelatin and should be diluted enough with water or other liquid so that they don't get frimly gelled when cold.

We can learn a lot about picnic foods from the foods of other countries. British cold meat-pies, Cornish pastries and other pastries stuffed with assorted fillings are delectable eat-out-of-hand fare.

Elegant picnickers stop at almost nothing wrapped in crusts. They often carry along pates and meat terrines, meat and fish loaves, cooked in brioche dough or puff pastry. Ordinary favorites such as chili, spaghetti dishes and all kinds of soups and stews are familiar to those who want to cook at the picnic spot or camping site.

Desserts can be fancy, but fresh fruit really is the best all-around desserts, along with brownies, cakes or cookies, which can be eaten neatly while taking a walk through the woods or along the shore.

Not all picnics need to have fancy, expensive food. Remember that there is nothing wrong with a hard-boiled egg, but it's not the only kind that belongs at an outdoor meal. They can be stuffed or coated with green mayonnaise or they can come to the party in a French quiche or a Chinese egg roll.

As its best the outdoor meal should be an occasion. It deserves food that has been carefully prepared to make it really special.

Outdoor grill has room for lamb, seafood, too

Chicken parts, spare ribs, hamburgers, hot dogs and steaks are not the only foods that will benefit from the distinctively rich searing on the outdoor grill.

Also ideally suited to the barbeque are skewered seafood and many dishes whose recipes are Middle Eastern or Oriental in origin. Lamb shish kebab is the classic. The boned leg cut into one-and-a-half-inch cubes will be the most tender. As an alternative to lamb, chunks of pork tenderloin in a soy-based marinade or morsels of boned chicken breast that have been marinated in yogurt mixed with curry or tandoori spices (sold at gourmet shops or Indian groceries) are good.

For kilicsis, a Turkish specialty, marinate cubes of swordfish in sliced onion, lemon, olive oil and salt and pepper, then alternate them on skewers with bay leaves that have soaked in hot water. Compact, highly seasoned ovals of ground meat (usually lamb but beef may be substituted) on skewers are Indian-style kofta. Make sure the skewers you use are long ones. Wooden skewers must be soaked in water before using.

Skewering fat sausages makes them easier to manage. A hinged hamburger grill is another convenient device for barbecuing sausages. In addition to spicy, fennel-scented Italian sausage, try French boudins blancs grilled until they begin to blister, then served with a sharp Dijon mustard. Peppery Spanish chorizos seared, then sliced, make excellent cocktail nibbles.

Individual portions of hardshell clams and mussels, tightly wrapped in squares of heavy duty foil with a lump of butter and a sprig of fresh thyme, will steam in about 20 minutes on the grill. Serve them as an hors d'oeuvre. Soak ears of corn in their husks in water for one hour, then place them right on the grill for 10 to 15 minutes. Turn them once.

Grill thick veal, lamb or pork chops basted, marinated or simply rubbed with fresh herbs and brushed with oil. Finally, consider a whole, boned leg of lamb marinated, then spread on the barbecue and cooked as you would a steak. Since the meat is not of even thickness, some parts might have to be sliced off before all the meat is done. A whole seven-pound leg of lamb boned will serve at least six people.

Cough medicines more sophisticated

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

When there are so many different kinds of over-the-counter medicines that are inexpensive, it seems ridiculous to buy a prescription cough remedy. How can a layman make that decision?

Mr. F.F.

Dear Mr. F.:

A cough is part of a wonderful mechanism that clears the airway and the bronchial tubes of any irritation. This reflex action protects the entire respiratory tree from foreign substances, polluted air, the accumulation of mucus, and inhalants.

If there is the slightest irritant in the windpipe, or an infection or inflammation, a signal is sent immediately to the cough centre in the brain. This message is then relayed to the muscles of the chest and to the diaphragm and an explosive cough tends to clear the passageway of the irritant.

There are two basic kinds of cough. The first is a dry one — which is hacking and may be the result of irritation by tobacco, smoke or other pollutants in the inhaled air. The second is a productive cough — which brings up the accumulated mucus or pus that results from infection.

The treatment of a cough, therefore, depends on establishing the underlying cause. Once this is done, the decision is made as to whether suppressing a cough or encouraging it is the ideal form of treatment. Doctors sometimes change within a very few days the nature of the medicines they prescribe. Each medicine serves a very specific function.

There are many excellent over-the-counter cough medicines which doctors suggest without writing a prescription, for the old method of compounding cough medicines with many ingredients is time-consuming and expensive. Many of the over-the-counter drugs now have many of the ingredients that once were included in the "specially compounded" medicines.

Dear Doctor:

I have two impacted wisdom teeth. There seems to be a difference of opinion as to whether they should be removed. Is it always necessary to have this done?

Miss F.W.

Dear Miss W.:

If impacted wisdom teeth are a source of infection, if they impinge on nerves that cause pain, if they affect the bite, if they affect the jaw joint, or if they crowd the bite, then serious consideration should be given to their removal.

Dentists and dental surgeons no longer recommend the removal of wisdom teeth "because they are there."

Curd made from scratch

question & answer

Q. A few years ago there appeared in your column a recipe for lemon curd. For years I made this but I've lost the recipe.

A. This is probably the curd you want.

LEMON CURD

- 8 egg yolks
- 2 cups sugar
- ½ cup butter at room temperature
- Grated rind of 2 lemons
- 1½ to 2 cups freshly squeezed lemon juice
- ¼ teaspoon salt

1. Combine the yolks, sugar, butter, lemon rind, lemon juice and salt in the top of a double boiler.

2. Place over simmering water and cook, stirring constantly, until the mixture thickens. Do not let the mixture boil or it will curdle.

3. Pour and scrape the mixture into glass jars and seal tightly. This will keep for weeks in the refrigerator. Serve as a cake filling or with buttered English muffins.

Yield: About 3 cups.

Q. A friend of mine was given a fresh, onion-like vegetable known as a ramp. It came from West Virginia. Can you tell me how it is used?

A. Almost annually there are new accounts of ramp, which grows wild in many parts of North America. In all probability it is most closely associated with North Carolina, for that state has an annual convention of the "North Carolina Friends of the Ramp."

The ramp is said to have its ardent fanciers and its equally vociferous opponents, who declare it to be an "abominable cross of onion and garlic with the worst features of both."

The vegetable is eaten both raw and cooked. Some uses for it, when chopped, are in meat loaves and scrambled eggs. Ramp is eaten raw in the South with barbecues and fried ham. The ramp is most often referred to as a "wild leek." It does resemble a scallion.

One authority declares that the name derives from "ransom," a common name for an unrelated plant, the European bellflower known as Campanula rapunculus. Ramp can be found in the Catskill Mountains in May and June.

Q. I recently read an account of dining in Singapore, It noted that one of the dishes served was gado-gado sauce, which calls for two curry leaves. Years ago, I think you stated that the word "curry" pertained to a blend of spices and did not refer to a specific spice. Can you enlighten me?

A. Yes, and at my own expense. I must confess that until quite late in my career I was ignorant of the fact that there is a single spice or flavor that is called a "curry leaf." I recanted in detail with proper contrition when I conceded that this was true. It is also true that many, and I suspect most, formulas for curry powder (or garam massala, which is similar) do not contain powdered curry leaves.

Q. Do you have a quick recipe for beans?

A. Yes, using tinned materials, Old West Pot can be prepared in just half an hour.

OLD WEST BEAN POT

- 1 can (19-oz.) baked beans
- 1 can (14-oz.) kidney beans, drained
- 1 can (14-oz.) lima beans, drained
- 1 cup chopped green pepper
- 1 can (about 14-oz.) tomatoes
- 1 cup cooking onions (diced)
- Salt and pepper to taste.
- ½ cup shredded cheddar cheese
- Paprika.

Combine beans, pepper, tomatoes, salt, pepper and onions in 2-quart casserole. Sprinkle with cheese and paprika. Bake in 375° oven 30 minutes.

Broiled lamb is simple and delicious — even without lark stuffing

Lamb a la simple

partner's cookbook

By MIKE McGRADY

Some readers have noticed the absence of lamb dishes here. The reason we have not had many lamb recipes is the same reason we have not had many caviar recipes: because the kind of investment one makes in a matched set of loin chops is enough to take away your appetite.

It is not, however, because cooking lamb presents any problems. On the contrary. With most cuts of lamb, you don't have to do much more than put them fairly near an ongoing fire.

But of course, that would not be complicated enough to satisfy most cooks. They would be happier with the recipe described by Porthos, one of the original Three Musketeers. Porthos began with the whole lamb. He then watched as his cook "boned the lamb as he would bone a fowl, leaving the skin on, however, which formed a brown crust all over the animal." The boned lamb was stuffed, filled with sausages and larks. And then baked. With these somewhat picturesque results: "When it is cut in beautiful slices, in the same way that one would cut an enormous sausage, a rosecolored gravy issues forth, which is as agreeable to the eye as it is exquisite to the palate."

Well, times change. And so do tastes. So perhaps this time out we'll try it a simpler way.

The Staples: Make sure these are all on hand: salt, pepper, cayenne pepper, eggs, olive oil, wine vinegar, garlic, arrowroot, butter, red wine, Grand Marnier.

The Shopping List: One leg of lamb (six pounds or more, boned by your butcher); two lemons; capers (one small bottle); three medium-sized onions; one red Italian onion; watercress (two bunches); chicken broth (one can); spaetzle (one box, available in food-specialty stores); frozen raspberries (two boxes); cream.

Prepare the Day Before: The marinade for the lamb. In a shallow broiling pan, mix together these ingredients: three cloves of garlic, minced; one-half cup of olive oil; the juice of half a lemon; a half-cup red wine; freshly ground black pepper and salt. Peel the three onions, slice them thinly and mix them into the marinade.

Place the boned leg of lamb in the marinade and turn it over a couple of times. Refrigerate until the next day. Every now and then turn the piece of meat over. Remove it from the refrigerator a couple of hours before cooking it.

5 P.M.: We'll begin with the watercress salad. The watercress itself is rinsed and patted dry. The hard stems are cut away. A red onion is cut into thin slices and these rings are added to the salad. The dressing can be made now, then added at the last minute: three parts of olive oil; one part of wine vinegar; salt and pepper; one clove of garlic, minced fine.

5:15 P.M.: The raspberry ice. The two packages of raspberries are mixed with one-third of a cup of Grand Marnier and run through the blender or food processer until smooth. This is then returned to the freezer and later served in dessert cups with several spoons of fresh cream.

5:30 P.M.: The lemon-and-caper sauce for the lamb. This is the only tricky part to tonight's meal. It's tricky because you'll be using a double boiler and egg yolks. One misstep equals scrambled eggs.

While the water is heating up in the bottom half of the double boiler, stir together three egg yolks in the upper portion. Add the juice of half a lemon, a teaspoon of arrowroot, a dash of salt, a couple of shakes of cayenne pepper. And keep stirring as the water heats up. Add a cup of the chicken broth and continue stirring until the sauce starts to thicken. Remove the double boiler from the heat and continue stirring for a couple of minutes. Keep the sauce warm over the hot water until ready to serve. Just before serving add a small handful of capers.

5:45 P.M.: Start a pot of water boiling for the spaetzle. Following the directions on the box, you'll cook the spaetzle just as you would cook pasta. The tiny dumplings should be cooked in furiously boiling water, drained at the proper moment and served with butter, salt and pepper.

6 P.M.: And now for the leg of lamb. Preheat the broiler so it will be at its hottest when you put in the lamb. Drain the marinade away from the lamb. You will see that the boned leg of lamb is not of an even thickness — it is "butterflied" and this uneven effect makes for interesting contrasts. The thickest portions of the meat should be cooked brown on the outside and pink on the inside; the thinner portions will be just right for those who like their meat well done.

As you place the lamb on the rack, take a moment to open the red wine. Broil the lamb for 15 minutes five inches from heat and then turn it over. Allow another 10 minutes on the second side and then test it for doneness. You'll slice the lamb in thin strips, the way you'd slice a London broil, and serve it accompanied by the lemon-and-caper sauce.

Sara Mann's Chicken Paprikosh takes two small chickens, sour cream — and of course, paprika

craig claiborne

A few months ago we extolled the virtues of paprika and the Hungarian dishes it so nobly spices.

Truth to tell, in my recipes for three of the dishes, we did add a bit of garlic here, a bit of butter there and, as a consequence, I was roundly chastised by letters from a host of readers who were either Hungarian or of Hungarian extraction.

"You have committed a grave error," said one, who insisted my goulash (gulyas) soup was in fact "another dish called porkolt; not bad at all but eaten on other occasions ... for lunch."

The soup, he said, was eaten for breakfast "on the range."

The readers agreed that I should not have used butter (Hungarians prefer lard), but there was disagreement about including caraway seeds, garlic or sour cream.

Many submitted their own family recipes, three of which are presented here.

SARA MANN'S CHICKEN PAPRIKASH

2 three-pound chickens, cut into serving pieces
Salt and freshly ground pepper
2 to 4 tablespoons chicken fat
3 to 4 large onions, finely chopped, about 4 cups
2 to 3 tablespoons sweet paprika
1 cup sour cream.

1. Sprinkle the chickens with salt and pepper to taste and set aside.

2. Heat the chicken fat in a casserole and add the onions. Cook, stirring often, until wilted. Cook, without browning, until most of the liquid from the onions evaporates.

3. Add the chicken pieces and stir briefly. Cover and cook gently over very low heat until the chicken gives up some of its liquid, about 10 minutes.

4. Sprinkle the chicken with paprika. Cover and cook about one hour until chicken is tender.

5. Remove from the heat. Pour the liquid from the chicken into a bowl. Skim off the fat and stir in the sour cream. Pour the sauce over the chicken in the casserole.

Heat gently but do not boil. Serve with buttered noodles, or with rice. Fold in some nice crisp, steamed broccoli pieces.

MARIE LOEFFLER'S GULYAS SOUP

3 pounds chuck steak
1 tablespoon chicken fat
3 cups finely chopped onions
2 to 3 tablespoons paprika
Salt and freshly ground pepper
1 cup chopped sweet red or green peppers
6 cups water
4 medium-size potatoes, peeled and cut into half-inch cubes, about 2½ cups.

1. Cut the meat into one-inch cubes. Set aside.

2. Heat the chicken fat in a casserole and add the onions. Cook, stirring often, until golden but not brown. Sprinkle with paprika and stir.

3. Add the meat, salt and pepper to taste. Cook, stirring, until meat loses its raw look. Add the chopped pepper and water. Cover and cook about two and one-half hours. If the liquid evaporates, add a little more water.

4. Add the potatoes, cover and cook until potatoes are tender, about 20 minutes. Spoon off the fat and serve.

Yield: Six to 10 servings.

EMERY VALYI'S GOULASH

1 pound sirloin of beef in one piece
½ pound lean pork in one piece
2 medium-size potatoes
2 tablespoons lard or chicken fat
2 cups onions, finely chopped
1 clove garlic, finely minced
2 tablespoons paprika, preferably one tablespoon hot and one tablespoon sweet ½ teaspoon caraway seeds
½ teaspoon marjoram
2 cups drained, chopped tomatoes
2 cups finely chopped sweet red peppers
Salt and freshly ground pepper
3 cups water

1. Cut the beef and pork into quarter-inch cubes. Set aside.

2. Put the potatoes in a saucepan with water to cover. Cook 10 minutes. Drain and peel the potatoes. Cut them into half-inch cubes. There should be about two cups.

3. Meanwhile, heat the lard and add the onions and garlic. Cook until golden brown, stirring.

4. Add the meat and cook, stirring often, until it has lost its raw look. Sprinkle with paprika, caraway seeds and marjoram. Stir.

5. Add the tomatoes, sweet peppers, salt and pepper to taste, and water and cook, stirring occasionally, about 15 minutes.

6. Add the potatoes and bring to the boil. Simmer about 15 minutes or until the potatoes are done.

Yield: Six to eight servings.

Croquettes with crunch

Crunchy on the outside and creamy on the inside cheese croquettes can be served as a special luncheon dish or as bite-sized appetizers.

CROQUETTE MIXTURE

¼ cup all-purpose flour
1 cup milk
3 egg yolks
2½ cups shredded Edam or Gouda cheese
½ tsp. mace
pinch of white pepper

Melt butter in heavy saucepan over moderate heat; blend in flour. Add milk; stir until thick. Stir in whole egg yolks, one at a time. Mix thoroughly. Stir in half the shredded cheese until cheese melts and mixture is hot but not boiling. Remove immediately from heat; mix in remaining cheese; stir until melted. Stir in mace, salt and pepper. Spread in large baking dish or pan; let cool, then chill for 30 minutes. Cut into shapes and use in any of the following:

SCHNITZEL HOLLANDAISE

4 1-inch thick slices, leg of pork or leg of veal
croquette mixture
4 thin slices cooked ham, slivered salt and pepper
flour
1 egg, beaten
fine, dry bread crumbs
vegetable oil or butter for frying

Have butcher cut slices from the leg of pork or veal and cut pockets for stuffing. After pockets are cut, have slices (cutlets) flattened to ½-inch thick (1 cm). Fill with croquette mixture and slivered ham until cutlets are rounded but not bulging. Press cutlets closed; secure with toothpicks. Salt and pepper then dust with flour. Dip into beaten egg then into fine bread crumbs. Chill in refrigerator ½ hour, if possible. Heat oil or butter in large heavy frying pan until very hot. Fry cutlets for 3 to 4 minutes on each side or until brown.

LUNCHEON CROQUETTES

Cut mixture into serving portions. Dredge each piece with flour; dip in beaten egg; coat with fine bread crumbs, deep-fry or pan-fry in approximately 2 inches (4 cm) cooking oil.

APPETIZER CROQUETTES

Shape mixture into bite-size pieces. Dredge with flour, dip in beaten egg then coat with fine bread crumbs. Deep fry.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST
By SYDNEY OMARR
Thursday, July 17, 1980

ARIES (Mar. 21-Apr. 19): Low profile is essential — let others state views and reveal their plans. Pisces, Virgo persons figure prominently. Spotlight on need for public relations, patience, ability to detect hints, subtle clues.

TAURUS (Apr. 20-May 20): Insist on quality product and service. Your position is firmer than might be imagined. Accent on job, responsibility, relationship that has passed stage of game-playing.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You learn where you stand — especially in romance department. Accent on creative endeavors, intuition, speculation, sharing of knowledge. Your personal magnetism soars, popularity increases, you get good news conerning special task, assignment or project.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Explore, investigate, welcome new challenges, contacts. You meet someone who could aid in establishing "territorial rights." Leo, Aquarius natives play key roles. Highlight security, better relations with parent.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Give full play to intellectual curiosity — read, write, ask questions. Follow through on hunch, check messages and possible necessity for short trip.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Diversify, experiment, entertain, express views, display versatility and sense of humor. Gemini, Sagittarius natives figure in active scenario. Accent on personal possessions, payments, collections, income potential. Elements of luck, timing ride with you!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Stress independence, confidence, willingness to lead rather than follow. Aquarius, Leo, Taurus natives figure prominently. Judgment, intuition are on target — you are at top of lunar cycle. Puzzle pieces fall into place.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Much that occurs is behind the scenes. You could participate in clandestine conference. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius natives figure prominently. Be ready for changes, review of "lessons" and some questions by those who want you to be on your toes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accent on desire, romance, hopes and wishes. Major domestic adjustment could be on agenda. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons figure in scenario. Member of opposite sex "presents" you with gift — a token of regard and affection.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Emphasis on seeing world as it is, not as you perceive it when imagination dominates. Open lines of communication with professional associates. Define terms, get rid of superfluous material, streamline methods and techniques.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Obtain valid hint from Capricorn message. Perceive long-range possibilities; consolidate assets, be "in touch" with those who share your aspirations. You get more rsponsibility — and recognition. Money picture is brighter than initially anticipated.

PISCES (Feb. 19—Mar. 20): You "bounce back" from adversity. Agreement reached on financial aspects of agreement or contract. Aries, Libra natives figure prominently. Spotlight on what lies beneath surface. If persistent, you could strike chord of "universal appeal."

IF JULY 17 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have innate capability when it comes to organization — from business to charity to politics. Capricorn, Cancer persons play important roles in your life. You inspire confidence — people trust you, many want to follow your counsel on financial investments. You are emotional, loyal, intense, sincere and stubborn. Major domestic adjustment is featured this year, especially in September. A "serious" affair of heart could command attention in August. November will be one of your most memorable months of 1980.

Feeding on hostility

By MELISSA DAVIS
The Washington Post

My brother-in-law, Freddy, once told me the secret to his successful cooking. "Be gentle with the food," he said. Freddy is a very kind person, not often taken to irrational behavior. This meal is not for him.

It is no news to screaming, angry people that cooking is therapeutic. Perverse satisfaction can be gained from dismembering a whole chicken, hacking away at a cabbage or pounding a scallop of veal.

Bread bakers have been into hostility cooking for years. They get dizzy at the thought of sinking their hands into mounds of malleable, soft, fleshy dough, thinking it is the face of their enemy. I believe psychologists call this enmity projection.

Today's meal requires very little creativity or clean-up. It's like the scene in Norma Rae when the heroine yells at her husband, "You want cooking I'll give you cooking," and throws a pot onto the stove, smashes a whole dirty cabbage in the pot and adds the tea kettle.

To prepare the chicken for the onslaught, remove the innards and wash the chicken. Take a large butcher knife and hack off the legs, wings and breasts. Chop the onions, not in a prissy little dice like the color pictures in the Time-Life cookbooks, but in irregular goughes (imagine a lumberjack chopping wood). Do the same to the tomatoes and the apple. Just a quick chop-and-wound and it's all done. Now, don't you feel better?

(Sorry, Freddy, this chicken curry likes it mean.)

MAD AS HELL CHICKEN CURRY

Vegetable oil
1 chicken
5 ripe tomatoes, quartered
1 firm green apple, quartered
1 onion, chopped
½ small can tomato paste
2 tablespoons curry powder (or more to taste)
1 teaspoon each of coriander, tumeric and cumin (optional)
Salt and pepper to taste
1 container (8 ounces) plain yogurt.

Put enough vegetable oil into a large pot to cover the bottom. Throw in the chicken and everything else except the yogurt. Add one-half cup water. Cover and bring to a boil, then lower heat and simmer for about 2 hours. If the water looks like it is drying up add more. If it is too watery remove lid and reduce liquid.

It can be served on rice or by itself topped with yogurt. Or you can wait until the curry cools, along with your temper, and eat it the next day.

These foods are wild

MODERN MENUS could benefit from commercial cultivation of many of the wild plants that once made up the diet of the North American Indian, says Dr. Nancy Turner of the Provincial Museum in Victoria.

How about a nice salad of fireweed and stinging nettles? Or some cattail rushes with an order of swamp potatoes on the side?

These plants are not only good-tasting but rich in nutrients and could be commercially adapted to improve the modern North American diet, says a scientist who has studied the traditional native Indian bill of fare.

Dr. Nancy Turner, a botanist with the Provincial Museum, says she has compiled a list of more than 100 species of vegetables, roots and fruits that could find a place on the modern menu.

The plants were chosen for their taste, nutrient value and adapability to cultivation, Turner said in a recent speech to Botany 80, a meeting of five North American botany associations in Vancouver.

"These plants are a gift to mankind from past generations of native peoples," she said. "It is up to modern North Americans to accept the gift and to allow the resources of yesterday to contribute to tomorrow."

Her list includes 30 species of green vegetables such as fireweed, cow parsnip, Indian celery, cattails, willow and stinging nettle.

Also listed are 25 root vegetables such as false onion, wild licorice and swamp potato; 20 seeds and nuts like hickory, beechnut, black walnut and jojoba bean; 30 fruits including Saskatoon berry, pawpaw, Oregon grape and prickly rose and a dozen flavorings and beverage species such as juniper, Labrador tea and wild bergamot.

Turner said some of these plants could be readily introduced to the market in their present form while others would benefit from breeding to improve yield, taste and ease of harvesting.

For example, cross-breeding could be employed to take the sting out of stinging nettles which Turner described as a delicious vegetable high in vitamin C and iron.

"The success of new food items such as soybean products, alfalfa sprouts and yogurt and of speciality items like maple syrup, wild-rice and dulse (seaweed), are a good indication that at least a considerable portion of the North American population would be willing to try some traditional Indian and Eskimo foods."

Modern mass-production agriculture is unlikely to embrace dozens of new species requiring specialized growing conditions, she said, but the new varieties would be more readily accepted in small commercial and backyard gardens.

She said the new markets could provide useful income and the revival of nearly-forgotten knowledge for native people.

"Ironically, perhaps, the native people today are suffering more from dietary deficiencies than the general North American population."

Camping fare takes planning

A camping weekend always seems like a holiday for everyone, except for the person in charge of cooking the meals. Too much time is often spent preparing meals and cleaning up afterwards. To make your short holiday a rest for everyone, campers should take time to plan meals in advance.

First when planning, make a shopping list so that you take along only the amount of food that will be eaten. Choose simple menus which require a minimum of preparation time, 30 minutes at the most. It is also important to plan a balanced diet. The basics of good nutrition never take a holiday. You should follow Canada's Food Guide, even when camping. Thought must also be given to food safety.

Dairy products like milk and cream spoil easily. It is convenient to use skim milk powder. On the other hand, cheese is considered a safe camping food because it does not spoil as easily as milk.

Meat, chicken and raw or cooked fish, as well as processed meats like sausage and ham deteriorate quickly and it is important to keep them chilled in a cooler. If the meat is frozen before you leave, it will thaw slowly and will keep for two days in a cooler. The perishable foods, like ground beef, fresh sausage and stews, should be eaten first, and large pieces of meat should be eaten at later meals.

Smart campers will always have bread and cereal on their shopping lists. These foods are ideal sources of energy for boat rides or hikes in the woods. In addition, they keep easily without refrigeration.

In season fresh fruits and vegetables are an excellent choice for camping because they are so high in nutritive value and are inexpensive. Most vegetables keep without refrigeration for at least two days. However, fruits like peaches, cherries and raspberries, depending on their ripeness, should be kept in a cooler.

To keep all your food fresh and to prevent the ice from melting rapidly, your cooler should be kept in a shady place.

Senior automotives for Oak Bay

More opportunities for senior students will be offered by extending automotive training at Oak Bay Secondary School under District 61's Adolescent Options program.

Trustees agreed Monday to spend $25,000 for initial equipment to offer Grade 11 and 12 automotives. A total outlay of $80,000 is proposed.

Oak Bay up to now has not offered senior instruction in automotives as have other secondary schools in the district, but has for three years attempted to give some instruction using equipment designed for a junior course, industrial power.

There is student and community demand for the senior subjects, superintendent Allan Stables said, noting the Oak Bay shops are considered poor.

If the option at Oak Bay proves as successful as a similar one at Esquimalt it will be worthwhile, he said.

Stables said the program will be especially valuable at a school where because of enrolment decline there had been a drop in staff of 11 teachers last year and a further reduction of 9½ teachers this year.

NDP may block MPs' holiday

OTTAWA (CP) - The New Democratic Party warned today that unless the government consults Parliament before approving preliminary construction of the Alaskan natural gas pipeline, it will fight to block the planned summer adjournment this Friday.

NDP Leader Ed Broadbent made the announcement to reporters following a meeting of the party's 32-member caucus called to plot strategy on the controversial issue.

Broadbent said the Liberal government must not be allowed to change legislation authorizing construction this summer of southern Canadian portions of the line without bringing an amendment before Parliament.

Otherwise, the government would be in violation of legislation passed in 1978 that controls terms of the joint Canada-U.S. project.

However, Broadbent said the NDP would not oppose the preliminary construction as long as the amendment was introduced rather than cabinet acting alone through an order-in-council.

The Progressive Conservatives took the same stand last week, saying Parliament should be consulted before the legislation is changed. But the party has not yet made clear whether it too will block the adjournment.

Cabinet is to make a final decision Thursday and Prime-Minister Trudeau has admitted he has not yet made up his mind.

The NDP appears to have pulled back from its original position that natural gas should not be exported to the U.S. under any circumstances but held instead for domestic requirements. The party has frequently referred to increased exports as a sellout of Canadian resources.

Trudeau also said Wednesday he could be swayed either way on whether to approve the early construction and admitted the final decision boils down to a judgment call on whether the entire project will eventually be completed.

Broadbent was to press the government on the issue later today during the daily Commons question period.

The pipeline project has dominated Commons business for the last several days as the government struggled with a final decision. Approval of the preliminary construction is seen by backers as a means of inducing financing for the whole route.

Foothills Pipe Lines (Yukon) Ltd., Canadian project sponsor, warned a final decision was needed by Tuesday if weather delays setting back construction for a year were to be avoided.

Drought to inflate food bills

TORONTO (CP) — Owing to drought on the Prairies, beef, bread and pasta products are likely to take a sizeable jump in price in the coming months.

The drought in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and northeastern Alberta will means "beef prices will remain high," says Charles Gracey, director of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association.

Gracey said in an interview that the drought "is one of three factors which means consumers will continue paying higher prices."

"So far as the cattle industry is concerned, we are at the bottom of the beef cycle and, although we had hoped to expand production, high interest rates, a surplus of pork and poultry and the drought means beef will not come down in price in the near future."

Charles Tisdall, director of the Bakery Council of Canada, said that consumers can expect a "five-cent increase on a 24-ounce loaf of white bread," partially as a result of the drought which has diminished Prairie wheat crops.

This could mean a third price increase this year if, as expected, the federal government increases domestic wheat prices Aug. 8 when the current set price expires.

A spokesman for Catelli Ltd., a major manufacturer of pasta products, said the price of spaghetti and other pasta foods derived from durum wheat could be affected by both the pending increase in wheat prices and the prairie drought.

Some novel indoor plants

garden notes

Many of the people who, for one reason or another, are unable to have an outdoor garden are very enterprising when it comes to finding an alternative way of exercising their green thumb talents. Houseplants, purchased or grown lovingly from seed, are naturally a tremendous outlet.

But it is amazing the number of attractive plants which can be produced from seeds and grocery items commonly found around the house. For example, the next time you splurge on a pineapple for a succulent dessert, keep the top to plant, for it makes a foliage plant that's fairly easy to grow.

Let the top of the pineapple dry for a day, sprinkle the cut with some root hormone powder if you have any around and plant it. It doesn't need a deep pot because its roots are quite shallow.

Ideally, the soil should be half sterilized potting soil, one-quarter humus such as peat and one-quarter some kind of acid material like coffee grounds. Rinse the coffee grounds until the water comes out clear and dry the grounds thoroughly before mixing into the soil.

When you cut the pineapple, there should be about an inch of fruit left on the crown and when you plant it, bury the slice right up to the bottom of the crown. Remember that the pineapple hasn't a huge root system and also that it tends to take in nutrients through its leaves. So, at planting time, spray the leaves with a very weak fertilizer solution. Keep the solution to one-fourth the recommended dosage.

Keep the plant out of direct light or draughts until it is dry, then place it in a warm, sunny window. Do not overwater or you'll kill it but do feed it monthly, spraying it on. As a supplement, give your plant a very small dose at the same time of an iron-rich plant food, because pineapples need extra iron.

There are various brand names of instantly available iron for houseplants.

Sweet potatoes or yams make attractive vines for the house. These root vegetables are really quite easy to sprout, except for the fact that, like the ordinary potato, they are often treated with sprout inhibitors.

They are sometimes dyed as well, so before trying to grow one give it a good scrub. You can bury it in a pot right away or place it in a jar partly filled with water — this last way is quicker and you can check on it more easily.

But when the shoots are about six inches (15 cm), then it should go into a pot at least half again as deep as the tuber and the tuber should be completely buried in the soil to avoid rotting. To produce a lush vine, the soil should be fairly heavy and rich with humus. Give this vine lots of water and a sunny window. Give enough sunlight, they will even flower indoors, with bell-shaped flowers in a greenish color.

Almost any citrus seeds can be planted for attractive, miniature trees for the house. They like a loose, sandy loam. Rinse off the seeds and bury them a half-inch below the soil in their pots. Keep them watered and in a shady spot.

When they have a couple of leaves, start moving the plants gradually into the sun. Water them whenever the soil feels dry and feed them monthly. The acid fertilizer for the pineapple should be useful here, too.

Never let them dry out, especially when they are young. Usually they need watering twice weekly and spray the plant and topsoil daily if possible with a fine, lukewarm spray.

Don't count on your citrus plants to bear fruit — you can hardly emulate the conditions of the citrus groves — but given the above conditions you'll have a most attractive plant and conversation piece.

Princess to be dumped for 1981

Second sailing ends July 30

By AL FORREST

The Victoria Princess ferry will revert to one sailing a day from Seattle effective July 30 and almost certainly won't be back next year, Ald. Bob Wright said today.

He emerged from a meeting of the B.C. Steamship Co. board of directors to announce he has been asked to provide recommendations for an alternative to the ferry for next season.

The Victoria Princess will go on the Prince Rupert-Queen Charlottes run in October.

Wright said he would consider eight options before making his recommendation.

He said it was premature to discuss the nature of the options.

On Tuesday, Highways Minister Alex Fraser said the government might refit the Princess Marguerite and restore her for the 1981 season.

Wright said technical studies would have to be carried out before any decision is made.

Meanwhile, effective July 30 the Victoria Princess ferry will leave Seattle at 7:30 a.m. and leave Victoria at 6 p.m., making only one round trip daily.

Wright said the ferry would have reverted to this schedule on Labor Daly and the change takes place one month early.

"We will still have a carrying capacity of about 1,600 passengers daily, including the three trips of the jetfoil."

(By comparison, the Marguerite carried 1,800 plus about 40 vehicles. Neither the jetfoil nor the ferry carry cars).

Wright said today's decision was the only responsible course of action in view of low traffic counts.

He said the two round trips of the Victoria Princess had given Victoria a capacity of about 2,450 daily, up 60 per cent from last year.

This increase was based on the early indications of a banner season but a slump began in mid-May, after the eruption of Mount St. Helens.

The revised capacity of 1,600 should be about right for the present demand.

He said he will complete his technical studies of various options for next year by mid-August so BCSC can get an early start in planning for next year.

Earlier today, Victoria MLA Charles Barber said Fraser's hints about the return of the Marguerite would result in a renewal of Maggie fever.

He said Fraser must have been doing more than floating a trial balloon when he hinted the Marguerite might be refitted for the 1981 season.

"He must be serious about it because it would be dangerous to raise hopes on this — there is too much emotion involved," Barber said.

"I'd be delighted to see the Marguerite. If Mr. Fraser will put her back in service I promise not to say: I told you so. At least not very loudly."

On Tuesday Fraser blamed the unpopularity of Maggie's replacement, the Victoria Princess, as a factor in the 35-per-cent decline in Seattle-Victoria travel in June.

He said the Marguerite might be brought back for 1981 or the government might obtain the CP Rail ferry, the Princess of Vancouver, which runs between Nanaimo and Vancouver. She is similar to the Marguerite and has been certified seaworthy until 1982.

Miami blacks battle with police

MIAMI (AP) — Gangs of black youths roamed the streets of Liberty City today after five white policemen were shot and wounded and 500 officers in riot gear cordoned off a 14-square-kilometre area of northwestern Miami.

More than 25 people were reported injured during a night of rock- and bottle-throwing, sporadic looting, arson, firebombing and sniper fire.

Seven people had been arrested by early today.

The night-long violence by hundreds of youths was triggered Tuesday by a plainclothes officer's attempt to stop two black youths from robbing a white motorist in the same neighborhood devastated by race riots two months ago, officials said.

A smaller area in Coconut Grove in southwestern Miami also was sealed off by police carrying shotguns and automatic weapons.

"Hell, man, we're fighting back," one black teenager said.

"Blacks have to stand up, man," said 17-year-old Jerry Pounder. "The way they (the police) handle things is all wrong. It's just a disgrace. They come in here bluffing somebody down."

Firefighters battled three fires, including one at a gasoline service station.

"We've had numerous shiping incidents reported throughout the night," said Jim Bigler, Dade County Central District officer. "But for the most part, we've been trying to stay out of the area and let things calm down. The tension (from the May 17 riots) has not eased. It is still acute."

Dade County Lieut. Robert Fortney said police reported more gunfire Tuesday than in the May riots, perhaps because of the looting of gunshops during the riots that left 18 people dead. Some of the victims were motorists caught in the bloody outpouring.

Terrified white drivers raced through Liberty City as bricks and rocks pelted their cars Tuesday. "I thought I wouldn't make it out alive," said Jose Fernandez, 26.

Police fired tear gas to disperse throngs of black youths. Several people, including a seven-month-old baby, were treated for gas inhalation.

The area was devastated by three days of rioting that broke out May 17 after an all-white jury acquitted four white former Dade policemen charged in the beating death of black Miami businessman Arthur McDuffie. The rioting, which included random, brutal attacks on whites, caused more than $100 million in damage.

Much of the violence Tuesday was aimed at police, who were not calling it a racial problem, said Sgt. Peter Cuccaro.

The violence erupted late in the afternoon after three officers on a stakeout broke up the robbery of a white motorist by a pair of black youths. Sgt. Fred Pelny, 39, and two policemen chased two suspects into a Liberty City housing project.

"They fought us," Pelny said. "They started hollering to the crowd and the crowd started coming and they started shooting at us."

Pelny was shot in the back as the officers retreated from a rock-throwing crowd.

Brewery dispute in limbo

While hotels and the public continue stockpiling beer, there still is little indication today whether a labor dispute will shut down the brewery industry.

Plant managers at three major breweries are in a legal position to lock out 1,500 employees but have not taken any action.

Union leaders are expected to complete a strike vote among their members but say they are not planning one immediately.

And both sides appear to be in no hurry to shut down plants

Representatives for Labatt's, Molson and Carling O'Keefe, and the Brewery, Winery and Distillery Workers Union held 12 hours of talks which broke down Monday night. John Langley, union spokesman, said the union would reassess its position.

The union took the position in a news conference Tuesday that it did not need to complete a strike vote among its total membership because one had already been taken among the employees at Labatt's in Victoria.

Eric Harris, chief management negotiator, told a news conference the employers have told the union they are prepared to improve on their three-year offer Tuesday but the union didn't respond "so the ball is in their court."

Langley said the union is waiting for management to respond to its two-year contract proposal.

Border sealing sows confusion

Times News Services

TEHRAN — Iran today announced that all outgoing air, sea and land traffic would be banned, but left airlines and other carriers in a state of confusion by a series of conflicting announcements.

The state radio first announced Tuesday night that there would be a one-week ban which was immediately denied by the office of President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr. Then early this morning a spokesman confirmed that traffic would be stopped, but said the ban would only last for 48 hours.

An abortive coup attempt announced by the government last week was given by the radio as the reason for the border closure.

There are about 130 international flights leaving Tehran each week, meaning that probably more than 3,000 passengers will have to delay their departure plans.

Thousands of Iranians traditionally try to escape the country's searing summer heat by travelling — mainly to Europe.

The order will also affect oil tankers, which could cause some slight disruption in Iran's oil exports.

Meanwhile, the former shah of Iran underwent "limited surgery" today to clean a new abscess that had formed on his thigh, a Cairo doctor said.

Reagan courting Ford as V-P running mate?

DETROIT (UPI) — Ronald Reagan today asked Republican congressional leaders to convince Gerald Ford to accept the vice presidential nomination, sources said. (Earlier convention story on page 48).

Reagan met for 40 minutes with Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee and Rep. John Rhodes of Arizona and asked them "to convince him it's in the best interest of the country for him to accept second spot," the sources reported.

But Reagan denied he requested the Senate and House GOP leaders to intercede with Ford, who has rejected past overtures from the former California governor and his aides.

Two men close to Reagan, Rep. Tom Evans of Delaware and Michigan GOP chairman Melvin Larsen, said Reagan had narrowed his list of alternatives to three finalists — George Bush and Reps. Guy Vander Jagt of Michigan and Jack Kemp of New York.

Reagan and Ford met Tuesday but both denied the No. 2 spot on the GOP ticket was offered to the former president, who defeated Reagan in a bitter battle for the 1976 presidential nod.

The sources said Reagan told the congressional leaders he was prepared to offer Ford a "kind of co-president type thing" and asked them to put pressure on Ford.

"They are pulling out all the stops," the sources said "He (Ford) is still holding back, still saying no, but it's not to the point where the decision could not be reversed."

The sources said Baker and Rhodes, who had not met personally with Ford, were trying to get a private commitment from him to say yes if Reagan publicly asks him to be his running mate.

Ford said today he expects another meeting with Reagan before the presidential candidate makes his final choice.

But Ford again said he had not changed his mind about running for the job he held before Richard Nixon's resignation, citing both constitutional problems and his belief there is a better candidate.

Ottawa, province parley faltering

TORONTO (CP) — Federal and provincial negotiators reached no consensus Tuesday night in a last-ditch effort to find a speedy solution to two major stumbling blocks hampering their constitutional talks.

The two issues discussed by federal and provincial ministers during the special evening session were which level of government should have the main control over off-shore resources and what should be the extent of federal trade and commerce powers.

A third issue — Senate reform — also discussed Tuesday was not considered a major problem.

The ministers did agree to send the off-shore resources question to a committee of junior officials for further study.

However, Roy Romanow, Saskatchewan attorney-general and co-chairman of the talks said today in an interview one should not "attach all that much importance" to that decision.

Jean Chretien, federal justice minister and the other co-chairman, complained to reporters that Romanow and many other provincial delegates do not believe in "my vision of Canada."

Many provincial governments believe Canada can operate as 10 separate economic units and that the federal government should not have the power to intervene when the flow of goods, capital and labor is disrupted across provincial boundaries, Chretien said.

There already are more trade barriers in Canada than in the European Economic Community, he said.

Quebec and Newfoundland already have legislation discouraging the hiring of residents from other provinces in specific industries, a point Prime Minister Trudeau frequently raises.

Romanow said Tuesday the province's are "very, very nervous" about the federal desire to step in and override provincial legislation establishing trade barriers.

WCB verdict rocks Kitimat

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Aluminum Company of Canada is upset over a Worker's Compensation Board decision that could lead to compensation claims from hundreds of present and former workers at Alcan's Kitimat smelter.

The board has recognized fluorosis — a degenerative disease of the spine and joints — as an industrial disease, which means Kitimat smelter workers, who fall victim to it will not have to prove the illness is related to the job.

Workers will qualify for treatment and pension if disabled and the onus will be on the company to prove the disability wasn't caused on the job.

Workers have been exposed to fluoride since the Kitimat smelter opened in 1954. Fluoride exposure has been a continuing issue at the Kitimat smelter.

The WCB decision in June was seen as a major victory by the Canadian Association of Smelter and Allied Workers. The union had funded a $100,000 study on fluoride and worker health at Alcan in 1978, environmental consultant Jim Brisebois said Tuesday.

Then a union official, Brisebois was instrumental in hiring researcher Dr. Betram Carnow, whose study concluded: "The men in the aluminum smelter are suffering from a crippling disease of the muscle and bone, and particularly of the lumbosacral and cervical spine."

WCB officials said Tuesday fluorosis shows up first in pelvic problems and spinal stiffness, conditions the company and board have until now said were caused by aging.

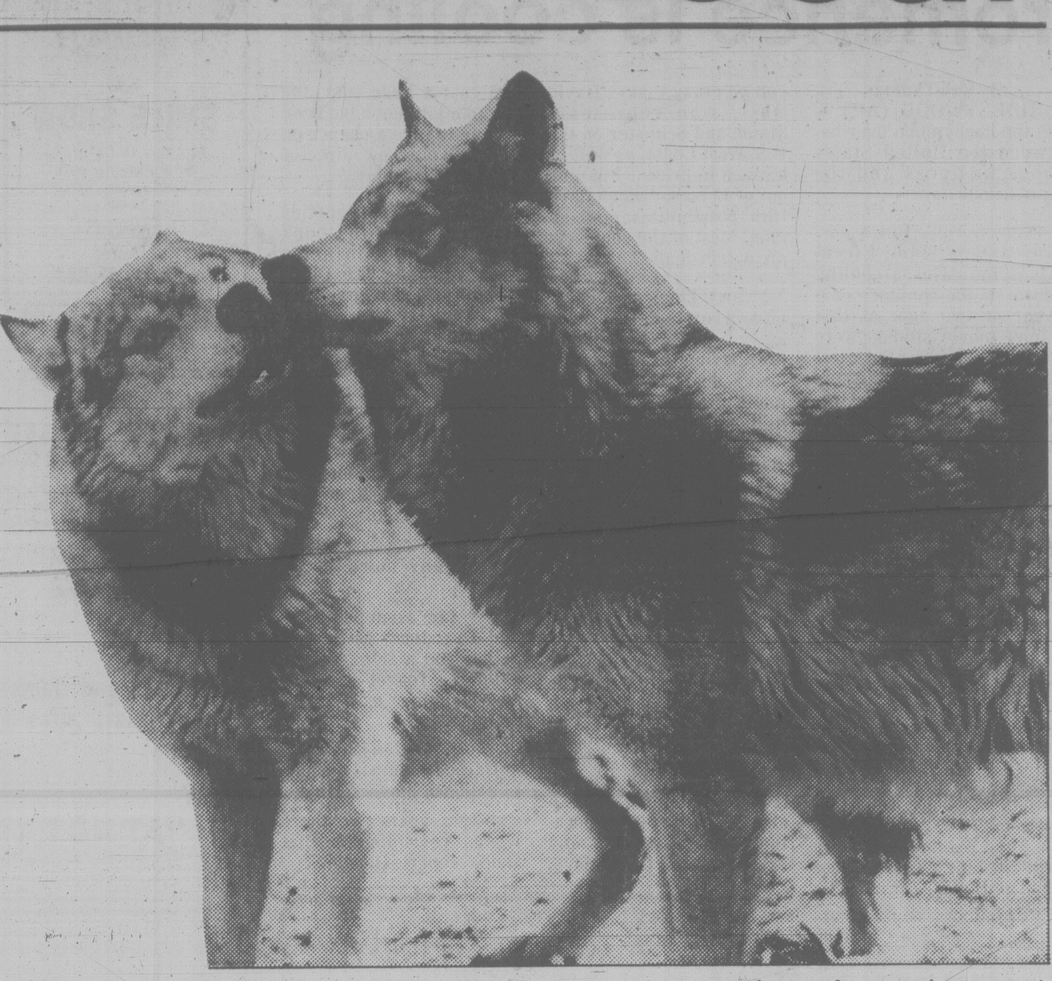
Carnow's findings now are being examined by University of B.C. researcher Dr. Stephan Gryzbowski, who is under contract to the WCB.

WCB officials said they did not know how many cases would be affected by the ruling because they're not yet in the board's computer relating to fluoride. After Carnow's report several claims were filed and some remain pending.

The WCB decision also affects a number of other industries, including brick and ceramic manufacturing, yeast fermentation processes and the glass blowing industry, board information officer Brenda Whittingham said.

Ten years ago, Vancouver Island's wolves were on the verge of extinction. Now, they are making inroads in the deer population, harassing livestock, and threatening people.

Island wolf packs growing menace



Once again, Island's wolves are target for trappers — and may face poison next

By DEREK SIDENIUS

A dramatic increase in wolves on Vancouver Island is posing a threat to wildlife, livestock and even humans, officials of the provincial Fish and Wildlife branch say.

And if the population isn't soon controlled, the situation could become serious, they warn.

In the past year, officials say there have been three reports of wolves harassing humans and one case of a direct attack.

The attack hasn't yet been confirmed, but if it is it would be the first ever against a human in North America.

The expanding wolf population has caught most biologists by surprise.

Ten years ago the Vancouver Island wolf, a separate subspecies of the North American timber wolf, seemed to be on the brink of extinction. Wildlife officials put it on the endangered list.

But today the animal is thriving as never before. In some areas of the northern Island the wolf density is among the highest on the continent.

The burgeoning population isn't unique to the Island.

Dr. Daryll Hebert, regional wildlife biologist based in Nanaimo, says wolves have made a dramatic comeback in the last decade from California to Alaska.

The weather is probably the biggest single reason, he says. Relatively warm winters over the past six or seven years have resulted in extraordinarily high deer survival rates which has provided wolves with an abundant food supply, he says.

But the pendulum is shifting. The deer populations are beginning to drop in areas of high wolf density.

In the Nimpkish Valley, one of the major deer areas on the Island, the number of fawns surviving to yearling stage has dropped from an average of 20 to 30 per cent to five to seven per cent in the past two years. Hebert says the wolf is the culprit.

Wildlife officials are concerned about the consequences of a depletion in the deer stocks. Starved of their natural food supply, wolves will be forced to turn to other prey, including livestock.

And this is happening already. Hebert says there have been several cases of livestock kills by wolves in the past year on the northern end of the Island.

But most alarming are fears that the expanding wolf population may result in attacks on humans.

Hebert cites four cases. Three of them last fall involved a logger treed by a pack of wolves at Loughborough Sound and two hunters, one at Iron River near Sayward and the other at Power River on the west coast, who reported they had been menaced by wolves.

One of the hunters, James Terris of Campbell River, said a pack of eight wolves followed him on both sides of a trail for nearly half an hour. He killed one of the wolves and then shot at two others but the pack didn't disperse.

The fourth and most serious incident happened last May 6 on Hernando Island, a small private island south of Cortes Island.

Dawne McGarvey, 33-year-old resident-caretaker, said she was walking along the beach towards her home when a wolf approached.

The animal kept coming straight at her and forced her to the water's edge.

She said she backed into the water but the wolf waded in and started to swim after her.

She picked up a rock.

"There was so much hitting and thrashing I don't know what happened," she said in an interview. "I was yelling and screaming and I think I must have landed a good blow because he turned and went away. It was terrifying."

She got in her boat and went to Powell River where doctors treated her for shock and a bite mark on her arm.

Wildlife officials have investigated the report but have refused to authenticate the attack as there were no witnesses nor confirmation the bite mark was made by a wolf.

Said McGarvery: "How could they confirm the mark? My doctor said he'd never treated a wolf bite before."

The wolf, one of two which migrated to the island three years ago, was shot and killed three weeks ago. McGarvey shot the other about 18 months ago when it appeared in her backyard and attacked her chickens and dogs.

Frank Tompa, senior officer in charge of carnivore management in the province, said such incidents are rare.

However, he said the widening distribution of wolves may be bringing about a change in the animal's behavior.

"They may be getting used to people and losing some of their fear."

He said the only authenticated wolf attacks have been in Europe and Asia where man and wolf have been living side-by-side for thousands of years.

Tompa said, however, he didn't feel the problem with wolves is one so much of the possibility of attacks on humans, which he judges to be remote, but rather the effect wolves are having on deer stocks.

It is for that reason that controls are needed, he said.

Several options are open.

He said the branch is lifting its ban on wolves as a fur-yielding animal. That won't have much effect for a couple of years until trappers get new traps.

The branch is also considering raising the bag limit on wolves for hunters. The limit now is three a year except in areas where there is a chronic livestock problem. There the limit is 10.

But that isn't expected to have much impact. The wily wolf is a difficult animal to hunt.

Another option, and the most controversial, is using the deadly canid poison, 10-80 to "selectively manipulate the wolf populations."

Hebert said a proposal is now before a special committee of environmental and wildlife groups in Campbell River.

The proposal seeks to use the poison in a selected area to remove the wolves to see what effect that might have on the deer population.

But one option won't be considered.

There will be no reinstituting the bounty on wolves which was revoked by the government in 1955.

Said Tompa, "As far as we are concerned the wolf is still a protected animal. We intend to protect it, except in those areas where there's a problem."

UVic housing pinch worsens

The housing pinch for University of Victoria students could be worse this year than last unless Victorians come through with help, co-ordinator Shirley Baker said today.

There are fewer listings of private housing now than there were in 1979-80, and UVic enrolment is expected to jump to 8,000 in the coming session.

Baker said that means 4,000 to 5,000 off-campus residence arrangements must be made by incoming students, who are already looking for places to stay.

Baker said there is no relief in sight for crowded campus housing, which is limited to 900 beds. Plans for expanding university residence accommodation are at least a year away.

Residence priority is given to first-year students from out of town. Second choice goes to more senior out-of-town students. Those whose homes are in Victoria are not eligible for residence halls.

Baker said motels and hotels are being asked to offer students their off-season rooms.

Private citizens with extra space suitable for a student between September and mid-April should call the housing co-ordinator's office at UVic, 477-6911.

Heritage house for rent?

A Saanich heritage home built by Capt. Charles Dodd in 1860 will be renovated and rented out, a standing committee of council has decided.

A staff recommendation to spend about $17,000 fixing the house still needs to be endorsed by council Monday.

Municipal solicitor William Tremayne recommends the house remain in Lambrick Park, where it has been for several months.

Little Niagara fall survived

An 18-year-old Saanich man is in satisfactory condition in Victoria General Hospital after tumbling 60 feet while climbing in Goldstream Park Tuesday night.

Murray Joseph Lambert, 3491 Aloha, was climbing a cliff adjacent to Little Niagara Falls with a group of friends about 8 p.m. and had just grabbed a shrub when the roots gave way, Colwood RCMP said.

He fell down the steep incline and landed in the creek bed.

Police and a provincial ambulance crew rescued Lambert and whisked him to hospital.

The extent of his injuries is not known but a police spokesman said they were not believed to be serious.

It was the second hiking mishap in Greater Victoria in the past week.

Last Friday 27-year-old Alison Louise Marshall of Fernie died after she slipped off a ledge in the Sooke River canyon above the potholes and fell about 150 feet.

Murder reward raised

The reward for information leading to the conviction of the killer of Suzanne Seto in Duncan June 3 has been increased from $26,000 to $32,000.

The Chinese Benevolent Association in Vancouver raised the original amount the week following the murder.

Seto, a Vancouver land-use consultant, went to Duncan June 2 to carry out an appraisal.

ICBC 'bungling' blamed by body shops in squeeze

By DEREK SIDENIUS

A surcharge war over body shop rates will spread throughout the province if the Insurance Corporation of B.C. doesn't agree to sit down and negotiate, the general manager of the Automotive Retailers Association warned today.

Ron Baldwin charged the corporation with being aloof to problems in the industry and said even the politicians are afraid to intervene.

"They (ICBC) have simply refused to negotiate with us," Baldwin said.

"It's incredible. We are dealing with a monopoly that is the toughest in the province and maybe the toughest in Canada."

Body shop owners are unhappy with the $25.60 an hour rate which ICBC set last April.

Baldwin said there is no way operators can get by. The rate, increased by $2 or 8.5 per cent over the previous year, is inadequate, he said. Labor costs over the same period have shot up 15.5 per cent.

Several Lower Mainland body shops have started charging customers surcharges up to 22 per cent above the ICBC rate.

The actions follows similar moves made last week in Prince George.

So far Victoria operators haven't joined the surcharge war.

But none are happy with the rate being offered.

Said Charlie Forrest, service manager for Metro Toyota: "None of us can live with it, but what can you do?"

Forrest said: "You might as well talk to a gas pump as talk to ICBC."

He said the corporation is able to get its own way because the body shop industry lacks a solid, unified base in the province.

Ninety per cent of the 1,500 body shops are small businesses without the resources or clout to lobby successfully for better rates.

Baldwin said the association tried to meet with the ICBC board of directors prior to April but was refused.

"They simply set the rate and told us to live with it.

Baldwin said the association had agreed to put the matter to binding arbitration but ICBC ignored the offer.

He accused the corporation of using body shop owners as a scapegoat for "ICBC bungling in their budgeting."

U.S. fleet's in town

The flagship of a U.S. amphibious assault force and two escorts arrived in Victoria today, and the balance of the fleet is expected Thursday morning.

In all, 2,500 sailors and marines will spend the weekend here.

The USS Belleau Wood, a 778-foot-long Tarawa Class ship with 16 assault helicopters, 900 officers and men and 300 marines aboard, tied up at Ogden Point at 1 p.m. today.

Her escorts, the tank landings ships Tuscaloosa and Cayuga, berthed at jetties F1 and F2 in the Esquimalt dockyard.

The guided missile cruiser William H. Standley arrives at Esquimalt Thursday at 8 a.m., and close behind will be the USS Fort Fisher, an Anchorage class dock landing ship, and the U.S. Coast Guard cutter Midgett.

Marigold asks ban on suits

A court order will be sought in chambers Thursday prohibiting two former residents of the Marigold Housing Co-Operative in Saanich from further legal proceedisngs without first getting permission from the courts.

The order is sought by Julian Greenwood, counsel for William McElroy. Former residents Gonda and Ernest Blow, in a statement of claim, seek $10,000 damages from McElroy as manager of the co-operative for allegedly issuing a letter notifying another resident her monthly assessment was being almost doubled.

Greenwood's statement of defence filed at the Law Courts said the action was brought earlier in the name of Kim Wright and was dismissed last February by county court Judge Montague Drake. Further action, he said, is now barred and is an abuse of the court process.

"This is the sixth legal proceeding brought since August, 1979, by Blow or with his active urging and is clearly an abuse of the legal process," the defendant's reply stated.

Greenwood said he will apply Thursday to have the Blow statement of claim "struck out as disclosing no reasonable cause of action against the defendant, for being frivolous, vexatious and otherwise an abuse of the court process."

He will also seek an order that both of the Blows "be restrained from instituting any further legal proceedings in any court without further leave of the court."
